Feds get blunt warning

EDMONTON (CP) — Provincial Treasurer Lou Hyndman said Friday night any one who suggests that the federal government should take over Alberta's oil revenue is aiding the cause of Quebec separatism.

In a blunt assertion of provincial rights, he said Alberta has nothing to apologize for its $5 billion Heritage Savings Trust Fund, built up with 30 per cent of the resource revenue.

Hyndman said Alberta is saving part of its resource revenue "for the rainy day" when the oil wells run dry, and any move to take it away will be "totally unacceptable" to Alberta.

"Those who advocate that the federal government confiscate Alberta's resources are clearly playing into the hands of the separatists," he told a University of Alberta conference on the heritage fund.

Hyndman said if Prime Minister Clark succumbed to Ontario's pressure to redistribute Alberta's oil revenue and the heritage fund, the Rene Levesque government would have a good case for leaving Confederation.

The provincial treasurer said contrary to Ontario's claim, the heritage fund is playing a role in Canadian unity. He said the $200 million heritage fund loan to Hydro Quebec, plus earlier loans to Nova Scotia Power Corp. and the governments of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba, demonstrated Alberta's faith in Canada's future.

When a Guelph, Ont., professor suggested that Alberta is being greedy, Hyndman responded with savage scorn.

"The last charge that can be made against Albertans is being greedy. Never in the history of the western world has one province given so much to a federation."

He said Alberta has given the rest of Canada $15 billion by selling oil at "fire-sale prices." Ontario, he added, has been the chief beneficiary by using cheap Alberta oil to feed its industrial machinery.

But Alberta wants to change that, and the heritage fund is a symbol that "the status quo for Central Canada is ended."

"The decision making . . . is moving to the West. We are assisting that. That is one of our goals."

Meanwhile, Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller said Friday the federal government's proposed energy package could cost his province 20,000 jobs and consumers $1.2 billion next year.

Miller said that's the price Ontario will pay if Ottawa moves ahead with its proposed $4-a-barrel increase in the price of oil.

Speaking in Ottawa, Miller said the loss of consumer power over energy pricing would hit every province.

Ontario officials have calculated that each $1-a-barrel increase in the price of oil adds $300 million in extra costs to the Ontario economy.

Ex-city alderman, two others charged in $1M Donut fraud

A former Victoria alderman and two other city businessmen were charged in provincial court Friday with 130 counts involving nearly $1 million in connection with the financially-rocky Donut King restaurant franchise.

Charged with conspiracy to defraud, fraud, secret commission, theft, and forgery were 44-year-old Robert St. George Ellis, 3773 Waring, 34-year-old Terry Richard Strong, 343 Simcoe, and George Sheldon Parkhurst, 2777 Benson.

Three separate informations were laid, two Thursday and the last one Friday, two against Strong and Parkhurst and the other against Ellis and Parkhurst.

Crown counsel Michael Hutchison said the first information dealt with financial matters concerning the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the second with fraud and related offences respecting the Donut King franchise operation, and the third concerning mortgage investment activities.

Ellis was elected to Victoria council in 1974 but was defeated in a bid for a second term.

He was the president of a holding company owning four credit bureaus in B.C. and was an elected officer of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce.

In December, 1974, Ellis reported his holdings as:

Ellis Development Ltd., held jointly with his wife, Diana; an office building in Williams Lake; a single-dwelling house at 2590 Esplanade; property at 685 Beach, 1373 Rockland; on Piers Island; and a suite at 1400 Newport.

He listed as his creditors: the Royal Bank, Montreal Trust, F. Cabeldu and A. Semenchuk.

Ellis was also listed as holder of three dormant companies with no assets; Nor Pac Credit Data Ltd., Credit Bureau of Powell River, and Fan Tan Alley Development Co. Ltd.

Strong is described as a former bank manager.

Parkhurt's companies are listed as: Trizak Development, Olde Kingston Car Co. Ltd., 471 Trans Canada Holdings Ltd., Ronvan Equipment Ltd., Donut King Franchise Service Ltd., Ten Mile Developments Corp., and Rosspark Holdings Corp.

The Donut King company was incorporated Dec. 2, 1977, and Parkhurst was listed as president with Demetrios Psyllakis as a director.

On the five-count first information, Strong and Parkhurst are jointly charged with conspiracy to defraud

Bill cuts paperwork but zeroes on unions

OTTAWA (CP) — The government tabled legislation Friday which would free 70,000 small businesses of their obligation to report financial information to Statistics Canada, but would require more information from labor unions.

Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevens, who introduced the bill in the Commons, told MPs it would speed up the flow of information from the business sector to MPs and government planning bodies, while eliminating much of the duplication which now plagues small businessmen.

The definition of a labor union would also be changed so that all labor unions in the country with membership of at least 100 will be obliged to report to the government. Stevens said this would enable the government to get more complete information on unions.

International unions would have to report all direct receipts from their Canadian affiliates and all expenditures directly attributable to their Canadian operations.

Unions would also be required to provide separate information about special funds, such as strike funds and pension funds.

The bill, which must still be examined by a committee of MPs and debated by the full House, is designed to amend the 17-year-old Corporations and Labor Returns Act, the legislation authorizing the government to collect financial and other information from corporations and labor unions operating in Canada.

The bill would also raise the cut-off point for firms which must report to the government to include only those with $5 million in assets or $10 million in annual sales. The previous limits were $250,000 and $500,000 respectively.

Car chased, rammed twice

Saanich police arrested a 21-year-old man early this morning after a young couple said their vehicle had been rammed twice by another car.

Ronald Wayne White, 18, of 775 Station, and Leanne Vera Whyte, 16, of 2844 Millstream, told police they were driving west along the Trans-Canada Highway at about 2:30 a.m. when a car started to "play games" with them.

They tried to get away and turned on to Wilkinson but the car followed and in the 3900-block rammed the rear of their vehicle.

Police said White turned into a driveway and the car rammed them again.

White got the licence number and about an hour later police arrested a suspect at his home after a short struggle.

The man was released on an undertaking to appear in provincial court next week charged with dangerous driving, leaving the scene of an accident and assault with intent to resist arrest.

Island Socred admits fake letters

A Social Credit party constituency executive admitted Friday he wrote letters to newspaper editors signed with a phoney name and bearing the address of a vacant lot.

Norman Hobson of Lantzville, vice-president of the Nanaimo constituency association, said he did it to protect himself and his property from threats and to save his sister from any embarrassment.

Hobson admitted writing the letters, critical of NDP members and policy, after it was revealed the address on five letters to the editor in the Daily Colonist — two from L.J. Edwards, two from N. Edwards and one from M. Edwards — is a little-used parking lot.

The empty lot at 415 Dunsmuir in Nanaimo has been used for parking for at least 15 months and the property is now owned by the Nanaimo Credit Union.

The last known occupant was Iris Elizabeth Edwards, who moved to a trailer court after the house was demolished. She denied any knowledge of the letters bearing her surname but not her initials.

"I have never written a letter to the Colonist," she said. "But if I did I would have the intestinal fortitude to sign my correct name."

However, Hobson, the woman's brother, said he used the Edwards name with permission and that there was no forgery involved.

He said that ever since he has been in politics — Hobson is also a director of the Nanaimo Regional Board for Lantzville — he has been the object of scare tactics and persons have threatened to burn down his home.

He said that just as an author uses a nom-de-plume he used a family name with permission and an old family address to save his sister from any embarrassment.

"You can use any name you like as long as you don't use it for an illegal purpose," Hobson said. "There has not been any forgery."

David Stupich, NDP MLA for Nanaimo, said he and his campaign workers were aware of the phoney Edwards letter at the time of publication.

"We complained to the local editor and pointed out that the address housed a parking lot," he said. "But we didn't bother too much about them because we had more important things on our mind."

The letter disclosures and Hobson's confirmation that he wrote them opened another chapter in the expanding dirty tricks scandal which has embarrassed the Social Credit government.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has already instructed police to investigate two other forged letters — one to the Colonist and the other to the Vancouver Sun.

Both letters bore the name and addresses of real persons, but those persons later denied they had written the letters. One attacked NDP policy, while the other attacked Kathleen Ruff, former provincial human rights director.

In Sidney, the weekly Review said Friday it also was caught in the same trap as

Wrote fake letters, Island Socred says the the Colonist earlier this year with the publication of a letter attacking the New Democratic Party and signed by Gordon Townsend, a local NDP supporter.

The paper, like the Colonist, published an apology after Townsend denied being the author.

Meanwhile, Premier Bennett pledged Friday to sweep the Social Credit party clean of those responsible for "morally and ethically unacceptable conduct."

Bennett made the comment during taping of the television program Capital Comment — before he heard about the Edwards letters.

He said he expected the phoney letter-writing campaign to be the dominant topic at the Social Credit party's convention in Vancouver in early November.

He said he wants the matter discussed openly and wants people who subscribe to dirty tricks rooted out of the party.

In a related matter, John Arnett, formerly Bennett's press secretary, said Friday he has hired Victoria lawyer Rodney Taylor to obtain an apology from the Sun and columnist Marjorie Nichols after she said in a column Wednesday that Arnett was involved in circulating the dirty tricks tapes.

"If none is forthcoming, I intend to sue for libel," he said.

The dirty tricks affair erupted when a pair of Social Credit caucus researchers offered party members advice on how to fake letters to newspapers at a constituency meeting in September, 1978.

A tape of their instructions was distributed by the party to constituency associations during the provincial general elections campaign last spring.

One of the researchers, Jack Kelly, has resigned and the other, Ellen MacKay, will be questioned by the premier when she returns from a European holiday.

A news crew from CTV stumbled on Kelly on Friday at Sea-Tac airport but he denied he was there to meet McKay or to brief her on events during her absence.

Typhoon strands Chinese sailors

NEMURO, Japan (Reuter) — Almost 50 Chinese sailors were marooned today aboard their freighter, grounded and broken in two by giant seas from a typhoon that wreaked havoc in Japan and its surrounding waters.

Japanese coast guard rescue boats and helicopters were unable to approach the 8,367-ton Ying Shan because of high winds and mountainous surf.

The ship, carrying 47 crew members, went aground 500 metres from shore on Japan's northernmost island of Hokkaido early today as Typhoon Tip sent winds reaching 130 kilometres an hour an hour across northern Japan.

A coast guard spokesman said the Chinese sailors were on the bridge of the stricken vessel and were signalling for help with flags. Hundreds of people gathered on the coast south of here to watch the ship.

Caught napping

NORFOLK, England (UPI) — The men on the night shift at the Jentique furniture factory had a dream of a job.

When production fell off the manager swooped down on the factory one night and found only nine of the 50-man shift at work.

Sixteen were dozing, eight playing cards and 17 others absent.

The management abolished the night shift, and 15 of the 50 workers quit when transferred to day shifts.

Quake jolts northern Taiwan

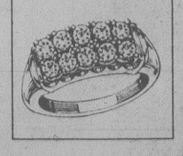

TAIPEI (AP) — An earthquake measuring 5.1 on the Richter scale jolted northern Taiwan today but there were no immediate reports of casualties or damage, the national weather bureau reported.

A spokesman said the quake was centred at sea about 25 miles off the northeast coast of Taiwan.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

Pot hunting from air under fire

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Civil Liberties Association wants to ground sharp-eyed RCMP officers who have been taking to the air in search of marijuana crops.

The association complained to Attorney-General Garde Gardom after an RCMP helicopter search of Lasqueti Island, saying the practice is illegal because it enables police to search private property without a warrant.

Association spokesman Reg Robson said Thursday that the helicopter raids are "fishing expeditions" by police who do not have reasonable grounds to suspect people of breaking the law.

"They're fishing. They're just looking around — which they wouldn't be allowed to do if they were on foot," Robson said in an interview.

Last year, more than than 9,000 pounds of marijuana plants were discovered growing on Quadra, Texada and Lasqueti Islands in the Strait of Georgia and on the mainland near Powell River.

So far this year, 700 pounds of the drug have been destroyed.

A previous letter, prompted by complaints from Gulf Island and Interior residents, drew a defence of the practice from deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel.

Robson said Vogel told the association the raids are part of B.C.'s program to identify illegal activities. He assured the group that the practice is legal, but didn't say why.

The association now is asking the ministry to explain the legal grounds that support its stand.

"What appears to be a relatively trivial matter, occurring infrequently, often turns out to be a precedent for other kinds of infringements of civil liberties," Robson said.

Laskin undergoes third operation

VANCOUVER (CP) - Chief Justice Bora Laskin of the Supreme Court of Canada underwent surgery Friday, his third operation in less than two months.

However, the operation was minor and the chief justice, 67, is recovering well, Dr. Ross Sharp, his physician, said in an interview Friday evening.

Chief Justice Laskin, the country's top judge, has been in St. Paul's Hospital here since Aug. 22 when he took ill during a vacation. He underwent a hernia operation and on Aug. 31 was on the operating table again. The second operation was to drain an abdominal abscess and to remove a small piece of bowel.

Dr. Sharp would not disclose the nature of Friday's operation. He described it as minor and added that the chief justice's condition was "quite satisfactory."

LASKIN
. . . condition satisfactory

After the operation, the chief justice was moved into intensive care. The doctor said expected Laskin will be moved to a regular-care unit soon.

In May, 1978, the chief justice underwent open-heart surgery and was away from his post for four months. That illness combined with his latest health problems has fired speculation that Laskin will be forced to step down.

However, sources said last month that the chief justice, despite his long stay in hospital here, is not ill beyond recovery.

Dr. Sharp said last month that the recovery period has been long because of his patient's age.

Insulation payoff Hydro answer?

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — A New Democratic Party MLA has come up with a plan to end the controversy over British Columbia Hydro's proposal to build a 500,000-kilovolt transmission line to Vancouver Island from the mainland.

Bob Skelly, MLA for Port Alberni, said a grant-loan system would provide an average of $3,500 to $5,600 to each of Hydro's 176,000 Vancouver Island customers. The money would be for the purchase of insulation, heat pumps and solar water pre-heating systems.

Skelly said the energy saved could power a residential community of 51,000 families or a new pulp and paper mill. He also said his proposal would create an economic boom for Vancouver Island in crafts and construction trades, as well as in plumbing, heating, electrical and hardware retailing.

The proposed Hydro transmission line will cost $1 billion. Residents on both the mainland and on Vancouver Island say the line will cause environmental problems and lower their property values.

Seattle flights get okay

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United States Civil Aeronautics board has approved an application by Airwest Airlines Ltd. to provide non-stop service between downtown Vancouver and downtown Seattle, the company's president said Friday.

Dick Laidman said in a news release the locally-based airline earlier received approval from the Canadian Air Transport Committee to begin the non-stop flights.

The airline hopes to introduce the new service on or before Nov. 15, he said, adding it will use its 18-passenger de Havilland Twin Otter aircraft on the one-hour flight.

Airwest already provides daily non-stop flights from downtown Victoria to downtown Seattle.

Charges at Endako

FRASER LAKE (CP) — Four Endako mine workers were charged Friday with wilful damage, stemming from a bitter labor dispute that now is in its ninth month in this central British Columbia community.

Two of the workers at Placer Development's molybdenum mine also face charges of possession of a dangerous weapon, an RCMP spokesman said.

All the workers are members of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical, and Allied Workers.

Charged are Robert Green, Miles Vodak, Thomas Lebedoff and Brian Van Hammen. Lebedoff and Van Hammen also are charged with possession of a dangerous weapon, a sling shot.

The charges stem from an incident Aug. 7 and involved a vehicle operated by the company.

Lebendoff and Van Hammen are to appear in provincial court Nov. 6 while Green and Vodak will appear Dec. 4.

The union went on strike Feb. 14 in a dispute over negotiations for a new contract. Company personnel have continued operations at the mine including shipments of ore through picket lines.

Loggers defy order

WOSS (CP) — About 300 loggers employed by Canadian Forest Products Ltd. were off the job Friday in the Nimpkish Valley on Vancouver Island in defiance of a Labor Relations Board cease-and-desist order.

Some 170 loggers began the walkout Wednesday in a dispute over travel time. They were joined Friday by another 130 loggers, members of the International Woodworkers of America.

Grain shipping slowdown over

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Members of the United Transportation Union voted Friday night to end a 2½-day work-to-rule campaign that has delayed movement of some Prairie grain to West Coast terminals.

The union members, who work for the Canadian National Railway, ended their job action when railway officials agreed to use separate spare boards for yard and train crews. The boards determines which employees get extra work.

The work-to-rule campaign was sparked by the union's objection to a company decision to replace the individual boards with a joint spare board.

Al Menard, a railway spokesman, said Friday the old system will be implemented for a trial period of six months.

"At that time the two parties will sit down and review the whole system."

The return to full operations should enable quicker handling of rail cars, which are being rerouted on a 300-kilometre detour over B.C. Rail tracks because of the loss of a key CNR rail bridge in the Vancouver area.

The bridge, which links the south shore of Vancouver's Burrard Inlet with shipping terminals on the north shore, was knocked out of commission Oct. 12 when a Japanese freighter collided with the span in dense fog.

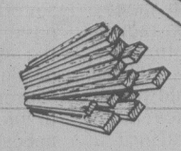

Shipments, however, have not een as badly hit by the bridge closure as many officials feared, say industry sources.

There have been predictions that repairs to the bridge will cost $3 to $5 million, will take 15 weeks to complete and that the capacity of Canada's largest Pacific port would be reduced by 15 per cent.

But because alternative means are being used to move products, officials now estimate only five per cent of rail traffic has been affected by the closure.

Ross Walker, vice-president of CNR's mountain region, has told a meeting of the Western Transportation Advisory Council that only 50 carloads a day of various cargoes cannot be handled by alternative routes.

Key to stability

The very real threat of substantial increases in the price of gasoline and modest increases in the cost of home heating oil fills most Canadians with anxiety. They are torn between the inescapable need to conserve non-renewal resources and the desire to maintain their lifestyle exactly. It's unlikely both can be accomplished at the same time.

The Clark government is reported on the verge of boosting the price at the pump for gasoline by 30 per cent within the next year, over and above whatever agreement is reached with the oil producing provinces for increasing the wellhead price of oil.

The effects such a move will have on the country's economy will be the subject of a raging debate between political parties, producing and consuming provinces, and the country's economic experts. For the average individual who trys to stay relatively informed, a simple clear cut answer will be as remote as the possiblity of OPEC reducing oil prices.

Some will argue diligently that there is no reason for Canadians to be overly concerned with world oil prices. If the oil companies in this country can make enough money to satisfy shareholders and ensure continued exploration when our oil price is $10 per barrel below the would price, then why raise the price? Canada, they say, can afford a privileged position.

Up to a point, it is possible to agree with that assertion. But the fact is Canada still imports about 25 per cent of its oil requirements.To maintain a uniform price across the country, the government is subsidizing the Canadian consumer to the level of $1.5 billion this year, more if OPEC lifts its prices.

One obvious fact that emerges is that Canada should make every effort to become self-sufficient in energy. It is bad to have the stability of the economy at the mercy of a few producing countries that set oil prices with no correlation to the cost of production.

Self sufficiency would also help the country's balance of payments problem because it would eliminate the export of $1.5 billion a year.

There are two ways to accomplish energy self-sufficiency. Either develop new sources or use less of what you have. Both are desirable. But the swing to significant energy production from renewable resources is too far in the future to meet Canada's short-term needs.

The immediate answer is conservation. It is something in which every Canadian, with some thought, can participate without loss of income.

Unfortunately, it seems the only way to an energy squanderer's heart is though his pocketbook. A good example is the Ford Motor Company's diversion of unsold gas-guzzling Thurderbirds from southern Ontario to consumers on a waiting list in Alberta. Fuel is 10 cents a gallon cheaper in Alberta.

Rising oil prices should not lessen an individuals standard of living — unless the person believes a high standard of living has something to do with having an eight-cylinder car or residing in an uninsulated house. It means only an alteration of lifestyle.

Influences from the past

By KIM BLANK

Too often we forget about how we have come to where we are; that is, we forget the way in which historical circumstances influence the way we've come. We do not exist as isolated from the past; rather, we are a product of it.

Let us consider the last few hundred years. Why have we come to this era known as the "me decade"? What historical events have influenced our present attitudes and outlook?

We have all heard of the French Revolution, the Bastille being stormed in 1789 and the King of France executed a few years later. The overthrow of the king meant the end of Divine Rule, and the end of an old order. It meant that the common man no longer believed in the king as God's representative on Earth. All the controlled, perfected, and apparently untroubled world turned upside-down.

Romantics came

The catchwords spread, not only as a political reality, but philosophically as well. Whereas in the 18th century, before the revolution, man saw himself as being greater than nature, part of a unified plan, he now began to see himself as an equal part of nature, part of a very diverse plan.

Man looked to himself and to nature for inspiration, and thus his subjective opinion and emotional capacity became highly valued. Man concerned himself with his inner being, but no longer considered himself the centre of the universe.

The name given this change, as witnessed mainly in art, is Romanticism, roughly the first three decades of the 19th century. What was traditional ("classic") and highly stylized was replaced with individual expression.

The Romantic outlook had a direct bearing on important theories and scientific discoveries which were to follow. We do not normally make this association between what is philosophical and scientific, but to make discoveries the scientist or theoretician must be predisposed to see. There is truth to the adage that one only sees (discovers) what one wants to see, or, to modify this, what one is looking for.

Thus three great men play extremely important roles in influencing where we are now: Darwin, Freud and Einstein, each almost taken for granted today. Each in a different yet equally profound way altered our senses, or poses significant questions: In the same way Darwin suggested particularities about our origins, Freud told of aspects of our behavior we never knew existed, and Einstein explained our relationship to time and the universe. Suddenly, after thousands of years of ideas, within a period of less than half a century, we were given new eyes to see ourselves and the world around us.

This, followed by two world wars and technological advances, both worshipped and cursed, has left us in an identity crisis we are still trying to face. The "baby boom" generation coming of age in the '60s, promised the good life, found it not so good. They became eccentric and radical only to reject the status quo, and the results induced many changes: women's rights, civil rights, a turning back to nature, and so on. It is interesting to note that "doing your own thing" or "me-orientation" is the status quo. Today there are as many self-help books as there are jogging shoes as there are health food stores.

Identity crisis

Why are we then in the "me decade"? Because of a king executed some 200 years ago, because some poet considered his emotional relationship with nature, because some scientist pointed to our unconscious behavior? Perhaps. The historical relationships are admittedly more complex than suggested here, but the past is worth considering if we wish to understand why things happen and why we think as we do. McDonald's may know something when it says, "You, you're the one, you are the only reason, you . . ."

Power slips from Toronto

TORONTO — The essence of this new Babylon can be determined by the fact that in Brandy's, a fashionable saloon down near the waterfront where the secretaries wear nail-polish that would shame Cleopatra, there is a permanent sign near the bar: "Dartboards Close at 8:30."

Here is the ethos of the city dedicated to Mammon. At din-din hour, just when one would think the oppressed ulcer set would like to slip into something casual in the pub, a little relaxation with the guys is forbidden because we must then shift into the disco hour and the five permissible sexes.

Coming isolation

An amateur shrink does not want to make too much of it, but discernible in Toronto these days is yet another unease, the slow realization that as the world unfolds, this mint of all that is true and fine in Canadiana is slowly, surreptiously, being isolated.

Just as New York is in its own way the most isolated, chauvinist centre in the Excited States of America, Toronto because of its dominance has painted itself into a bit of a corner.

It controls the reins of power, but lacks the threads linking it to those who hold it in such great contempt.

It is not just that the new prime minister of Canada is a nobody from a little Alberta town with the unlikely Disneyesque name of High River. Or the governor-general is a socialist from Manitoba with the name of Schreyer who married a lady called Schultz.

Or that the external affairs minister who represents Canada abroad is a Ms. Macdonald who comes from Cape Breton and is proud of it and who does a jig in her kilt whenever asked.

Or that the finance minister of the land, who can send ripples across Bay Street martinis at a single grunt, is a goin'-down-the-road boy from Newfoundland who impersonates a large shaggy dog for the purpose of disguising the fact he has a mind you could cut your finger on.

For the first time since the early Diefenbaker years, Toronto has no one at the ear of power. The tiny perfect ex-mayor, David Crombie, who in the scheme of things would seem to have the clout to command a position within the Joe Clark thinkers, has been left below the salt.

The guy who was probably the most popular mayor ever of the most powerful city in Canada did not even make it into the inner cabinet.

There is, unfolding each day in Toronto newspaper headlines, the slow realization to motorists and people who are worried about heating their homes this winter that their chilblains in February are going to be at the mercy of two Albertans — Clark and the chilly-eyed Arab called Lougheed.

Only now, one suspects, do the residents of this city conclude the results of the long dissipation of a national role that was inherited by Premier Bill Davis, the most disappointing politician of our decade.

The power brokers here, only lately waking to the fact that the muscle (and the politics) have moved west, have seen within the past week the fact that John Robarts (who intelligently and responsibly used the Ontario-Quebec axis that Davis has junked) has been passed over as Canadian high commissioner to London in favor of a lady who is an old-time friend of the Clark family.

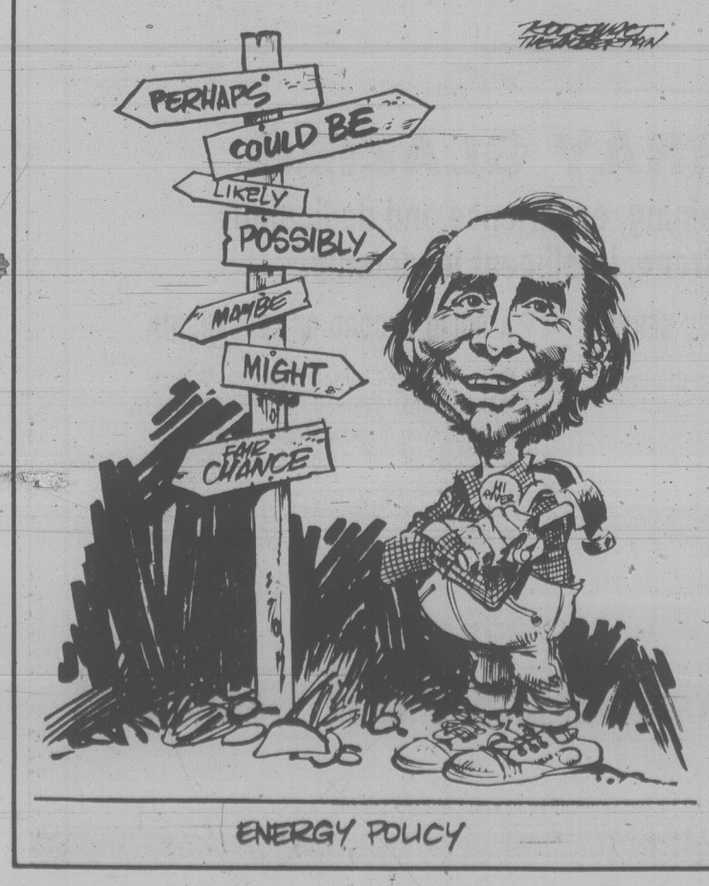

Now repenting

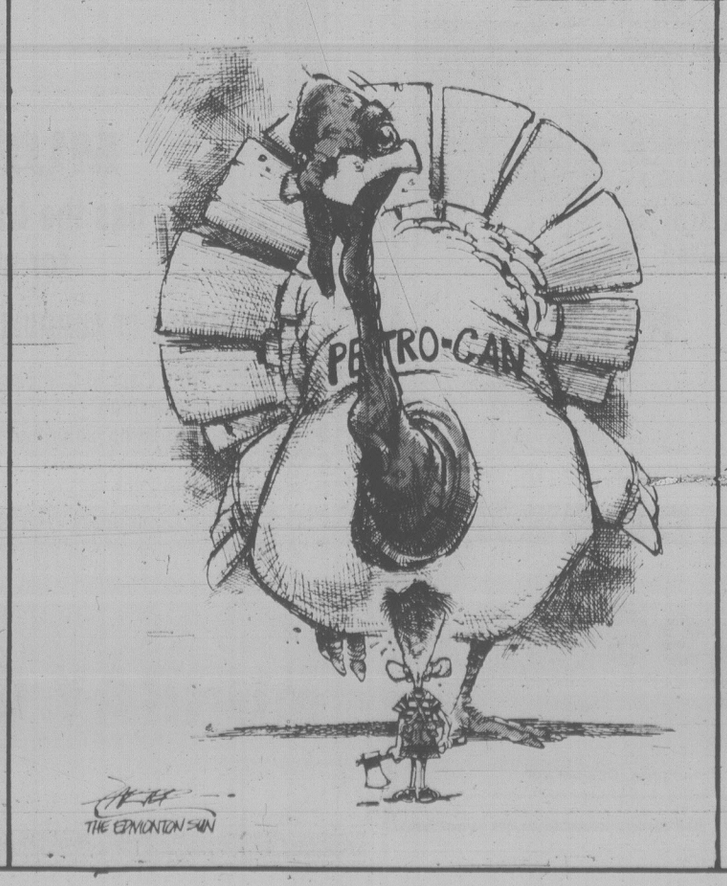

It is seeping through here, along with the realization that the C.J. Clark era will be controlled by influences outside Toronto, that the Trudeau phase is finished and something more than meets the eye went on in that motor hotel in Winnipeg last weekend.

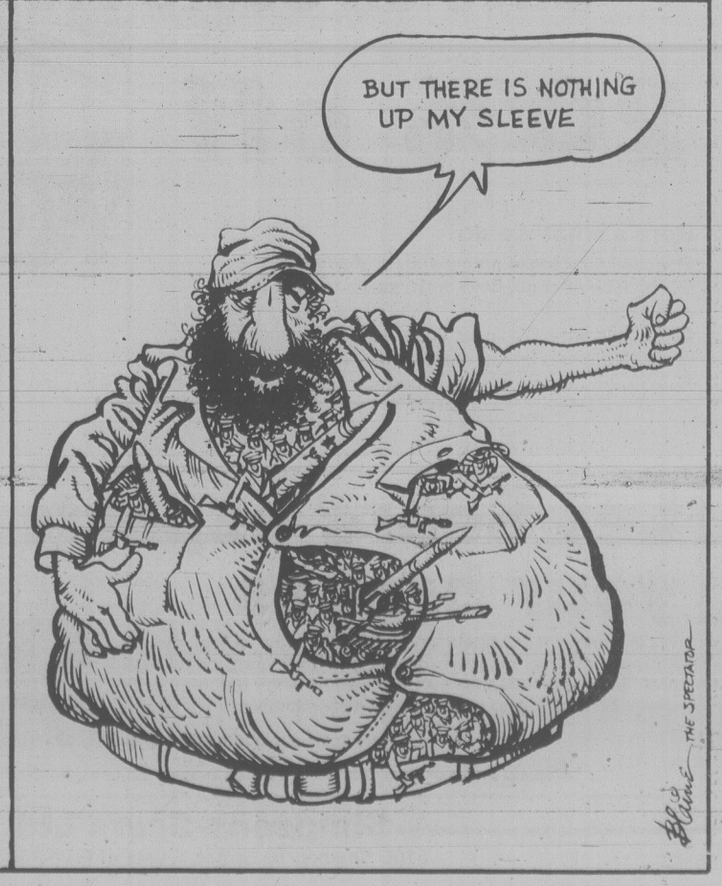

Those pseudo-heavies who didn't go there now repent it. (Which is why Don Macdonald was so shrewd as to show up.) Imprinted on all their foreheads should be the words of Tony Merchant, the cocky, chippy Regina lawyer who is the brother-in-law of Otto Lang.

"The bell is tolling for Ontario," he said. "Your time is coming. I think maybe a generation of your children starving in the streets will be sufficient. Then I think we'll be even."

He was joking, sort of. Sure he was.

System corrupted

The dirty tricks affair, or lettergate, or whatever you want to call it continues to haunt our provincial government. The police have become involved in trying to trace the real authors of an apparently phoney letter to the editor. Politicians are hurling charges and countercharges back and forth. Premier Bennett, back from his trip to the Far East, is, gallantly enough, accepting responsibility for the affair and trying to develop mechanisms to prevent any repetition.

Yet nothing of what is happening comes close to touching the heart of the tragedy of the affair. This is not the tragedy of the individuals involved, although the careers of two individuals already lie in ruins and others may follow. It is not the tragedy of a party, or of a government, though both may find themselves suffering for some time because of the silly, morally wrong, and totally unnecessary acts of a few party members.

The real tragedy, however, is the harm that is caused to the democratic system by this whole inane mess. It is the sort of harm that cannot be easily measured, nor perhaps even detected, but also the sort of harm that can eat away at the core of the system for years, the sort that can start a ripple effect that persists for decades.

There is, I suspect, some sort of still-unformulated Parkinson's Law that covers the situation. In essence, however, it states that in a democratic political system the bad will drive out the good much more often than the reverse.

It already has happened many times within our system. The evidence is clearest in the U.S. but there are dozens of examples from the Canadian and B.C. scene. Many of our best politicians — not necessarily the most competent, or the brightest, or the most politically successful, but the most honest, the most sincere, the most dedicated — have been driven from the system. Many of our best civil servants — the ones least willing to tell their minister what the minister wants to know instead of what the civil servant knows to be true — have returned to private life.

It is not, in most cases, an active process. Few people actually want the best to leave; many mourn their departure.

Yet they leave because they cannot cope in a system where they are surrounded on three sides by piles of paperwork, red tape and trivia, and on the fourth by people who play dirty tricks. Politicians and civil servants alike find little room for creativity or sensitivity or integrity. They find themselves caught up in a system where victory over the "enemy party" is the primary goal, where far too often the end justifies the means, where the needs and aspirations of individuals get swallowed up by the gaping mouths of Politics and The System.

The people who remain within the system and who take the places of those who leave are too often those who feel comfortable with the system's mentality, those who don't mind bureaucracy and red tape and who can convince themselves of the politics-is-war metaphor. They act on the basis of those convictions, and the public comes to distrust them.

All recent public opinion polls show that the public has a distressingly low opinion of politics as a profession. They have little trust in either the motivation or the competence of most of those involved in government administration.

This then becomes a vicious circle. With the reputation of politics at such a low ebb, few outstanding men and women are willing to give up their security and privacy to enter it. They perceive the political arena as being a rats' nest of incompetence and knavery, subject to constant criticism, and they leave it well enough alone.

That leaves a political vacuum that may often be filled by more people with a penchant for trivial regulations or games of moral war. They give the public more reason to distrust government, and fewer good people are willing to enter it. And so on, and so forth.

A dirty tricks affair like the current one can do nothing but hurry this process along. It gives a specific focus to people's vague, general doubts about the practice of politics. It "proves" to them that politics really is a low-down game and one they could never possibly play at.

It brings the system into disrepute. And that is what the public should be the least forgiving about: not that a few Socreds played some ridiculous election games, but that for the smallest possible partisan advantage they were willing to risk lowering the reputation of the entire two-party political system.

The doctors were right in Chad Green tragedy

The boy is dead now. His obituary is written and his medical autopsy performed. But the social argument about the life and death of Chad Green has just begun.

The four-year-old leukemia victim has become a human buzz word. Like Karen Anne Quinlan, whose name is synonymous with "pulling the plug," like Baby Louise who personalizes our anxiety about "test tube babies," Chad Green is now a "case study" for a host of concerns.

His name is the opening line in an argument about laetrile. It is the headline for a debate about parents' rights and children's rights. And it is the label for a discussion about who acts in "the best interests of the child."

Chad became a public figure when his parents took him off of chemotherapy, in favor of vitamins and laetrile. His doctors argued in court that this "treatment" was a prescription for death, and eventually the Massachusetts judges agreed. The doctors and not the parents, the court said, were acting in "the best interests of the child."

At that point, Diane and Gerald Green defied the court order against them, took their son and ran to Tijuana. He died there last week.

Now I can only imagine how painful that court verdict was to loving parents. I can only imagine how painful it was to administer medical care they disapproved of to their child. But my sympathy for their saga and their loss has to be tinged by the questions: Did Chad have to die? Are they responsible?

The Chad Green Case was hardly the first time that the courts have intervened in medical vs. family decisions. In 1945, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that parents could martyr themselves but not their children. Since then, the courts have often brought medical treatment to kids against the will and the religious beliefs of their own parents. They have routinely ordered transfusions for the children of Jehovah's Witnesses and operations for the children of Christian Scientists.

These cases were relatively simple. The medical evidence was conclusive, the treatment was short-term, and the benefits to the child were clear. The Chad Green case was part of this legal tradition.

But in the past year we have witnessed a new series of triangles between doctors, parents and children.

In California, the courts ruled that Phillip Becker, a boy with Down's Syndrome, could not have surgery without his parent's permission. In New Jersey, a judge said that a boy with Hodgkin's disease could be treated, as his family wished, with laetrile and metabolic care.

In both of these cases, the courts responded to conflicting medical testimony about both the disease and the treatment by letting the parents decide. For better and for worse, it seems that the courts have begun to shy away from determining for themselves what is best for sick children. Today, in an atmosphere of doubt about medical treatment, they have put the choice in the hands of parents.

This is, I think, understandable. Physicians who once offered certainties now offer probabilities. Lay people who were once passive patients are now wary consumers of medical treatment. We shop doctors, compare treatments.

More and more frequently we have to make our own medical decisions, for ourselves and our children. We worry more and trust less. In a genuine medical controversy the court often doesn't feel confident taking sides.

But there is a danger in this new skepticism. A danger that we will regard all medical judgments as controversial, and weigh all testimony equally.

In the case of Chad Green, there was not a single licensed doctor who would testify in favor of the parents' treatment. The boy had leukemia, not Hodgkin's disease, and the doctors had impressive cure rates of 50 to 80 per cent. With those percentages — not promises, but good percentages — they believed that anyone who refused treatment was guilty of child neglect.

Whatever the excesses of their ardor, I believe the doctors were right.

No, the medical profession is not infallible. The courts are a difficult arena in which to judge doctoring. We can usually trust the goodwill and judgment of parents. But we can't throw up our hands in defeat when faced with every warring triangle.

However difficult it is, we have to continue to pursue the "best interests of the child." Chad Green has reminded us of the alternative.

It's Super-rat!

New strain feeds on 'poison'

By ROBERT C. TOTH
The Los Angeles Times

To some people they are the lap dogs of the devil. To others, in the South Pacific and elsewhere, they are a staple food, even a delicacy "more delicious than pork."

But to most people, rats are the chilling incarnation of filth, decay and disease.

Their menacing potential has been dramatized by U.S. East Coast reports of rat attacks on people and of intracity migrations. Also by environmental studies of rising "super-rat" populations that are virtually immune to 90 per cent of the poisons relied upon to control the rodents.

Authorities doubt that any population explosion of rats is under way in North America, but they are aware of the sudden, harvest-decimating proliferation of rats in India, Bangladesh and sub-Sahara Africa in the past two years.

According to the experts, there are more rats on earth than any other mammal except man. Precisely how many is unknown, but generally dismissed is the World Health Organization estimate of more than 4 billion, or about one rat per person. Undisputed is the belief that rats owe their success to man.

"They follow man around the world, living on his periphery," according to Steve D. Palmateer, a biologist specializing in rat control at Environmental Protection Agency laboratories in Beltsville, Md.

"They are always just one step behind man, in his sewers and eating his garbage. If you build a town in the Canadian north where there are no wild rats, you'll have rats in two or three years. In Quonset huts at the South Pole there are rats, brought by planes."

Rats have hitchhiked on caravans, dog-sleds and covered wagons, but they spread from their indigenous area, the Indian subcontinent, mostly by stowing away on ships. Venetian spice vessels brought "roof rats" (so named because they nested in roofs) with the bubonic plague bacteria to 14th Century Europe. Spread by fleas, the disease killed 25 million people (1 of every 4 persons) in the great Black Plague epidemic.

At least 20 diseases are carried in the saliva, feces or blood of the rat. This plus the ugly incisors of the scurrying creature, which can gnaw through lead pipe as well as human skin, account for the aversion bordering on hysteria of most Western urbanites toward rats.

"Norway rats," more aggressive and bigger than roof rats, are now the dominant rat species in the world. They came from Asia aboard ships of all nations, although the name would unfairly put the blame on Norwegian vessels.

The third main kind of rat in today's world is the bandicoot, originally found in south Asian grain fields but now spreading into cities there. It has the highest reproduction rate: a litter of seven pups on average a month per female rat. One female and its offsprings as they mature can produce thousands of baby rats in one year.

Each rat eats the equivalent of 10 per cent of its body weight, which is about one pound a day. They consume prodigious amounts of grain, measured in millions of tons, as it dries in fields or waits in silos. They spoil at least three times what they eat with droppings, hair and other dirt.

In buildings, aside from burrowing into walls and biting children, rats often chew through wire insulation to ignite fires. All told, to dwellings and crops, rats destroy $1 billion in property each year, according to the National Geographic Society.

The much-publicized attack by a rat pack on a New York woman two blocks from City Hall in May was accompanied by fears that the brazen rodents were part of a "super-rat" population.

"Super rats" got their name because they are immune to those rodenticides whose poison agents are anticoagulants. Over 90 per cent of rat poisons today use anti-coagulant on the WHO-standard dose of 50 parts per million.

The substances, discovered by Wisconsin researchers in the 1940s, are widely used for human heart patients to prevent killing blood clots. In relatively large amounts, however, as in rat poisons, the chemicals promote bleeding, and the animal dies of internal hemorrhaging.

The New York rat colony was found to lack the genes that make rats resistant to the anti-coagulants. These genes apparently also create a craving in the super rats for Vitamin K, according to EPA's Steve Palmateer. The vitamin, found in leafy green vegetables, turns out to be an antidote to anti-coagulants, he said.

Some super rats live indefinitely on poison "baits" containing five and ten times that WHO-standard dose, and even 20 times the dose, Palmateer said. "You just run out of patience feeding it to them," he shrugged.

"The anti-coagulants are not only useless now, they are worse than useless because they select out of the rat population those animals with resistant genes who survive and then reproduce," he said.

One of the foremost U.S. authorities in the field, Dr. William B. Jackson, head of environmental studies at Bowling Green University in Ohio, said there has been "no radical population increase" of rats in the United States. Super-rats have been found only in spots in the country so far, and many other factors in addition to poisons limit rat populations, including cars, cats and stress, he said.

Super-rats first emerged in Europe, which quickly embraced anti-coagulant rodenticides. Laws were passed there forbidding use of any other rat poison, such a strychnine, because anti-coagulant rodenticides are far safer in homes with domestic pets and children.

But by the middle of the 1960's, rats resistant to anticoagulants began to be found in Denmark and Scotland. The problem has now become so acute in those countries that anti-coagulant poisons are banned.

According to Dr. Jackson, super-rats first emerged in the United States in the early 1970's at Johnson City, N.C., a farm region infested with Norway rats where anti-coagulant poisons were used in huge amounts.

"The pest control people said the rats came out to greet them, like dogs, almost begging to be fed the rodenticides," Jackson said.

Jackson, who found rats thriving on Eniwetok a decade after H-bombs had destroyed all other life forms (the surviving rats probably were in cableways under blockhouses, he said), has been systematically testing for super-rats in U.S. cities.

"Frankly, I'm more concerned about mice than rats," Jackson said. "Rats are peripheral but mice are closer to people, more tolerated, but the carrier of all the same diseases. The rat may be in your basement, but the mouse will be in your cereal box. Check those raisins in your cereal," he said.

Distressing rumor

Word is circulating in Victoria that plans are afoot to eliminate Air Canada's final service of the day from Vancouver to Victoria, namely Flight AC 143. I should be greatly distressed to learn that this rumor is well-founded.

By reading of the aircraft movement statistics over the past few years and on in to 1979, Victoria International Airport has maintained its place as 13th to 14th in Canada for traffic generally, while movements of commercial aircraft have increased from 42,311 in 1974 to 59,109 in 1978, an increase of over 40 per cent, while in 1979, for the first six months alone, some 31,683 movements were registered, suggesting the increase is continuing unabated.

Passenger traffic to and from Vancouver alone increased from 69,090 in 1977 to 77,980 in 1978.

In these circumstances it is difficult for me to understand why flight AC 143 should be in any way in jeopardy. On top of anything else, it is the last flight from the mainland to Victoria and as such is used by many who come from the east on afternoon or evening flights, some of which may be delayed in arriving in Vancouver and are therefore unable to connect with the 10 p.m. flight of PWA. AC 149 passengers, for example, from Toronto, if the flight is delayed, will be unable to proceed to Victoria (There is only a 45 minute safety factor between the arrival) of AC 149 and the departure of PW 344).

The removal of AC 143, furthermore, would cause great inconvenience to a number of passengers coming down from the Interior and bound for Victoria, not to mention those arriving on scheduled or charter flights from the South (San Francisco, Los Angeles and Hawaii).

What bothers me, personally, in this proposal is that it removes the only "direct" flights from Ottawa to Victoria which was such a blessing. For a Member of Parliament, or for a businessman at the end of a day in Ottawa, it was almost a pleasure to be able to board a plane in Ottawa just after 7 p.m. and to step off only seven hours later in Victoria. Does this mean that the comparable return flight (AC 208 and AC 124) is also to be abandoned? — Donald W. Munro, MP, Esquimalt-Saanich.

Deeper concern

Dirty tricks were a staple of my trade for 30 years, so my reaction to the current B.C. exhibit has been professional as well as personal.

Fellow public relations practitioners advocating tactics based on the ends justifying the means is not a new experience. It shouldn't be for anyone sensitive to what goes on around him. Only the naive or the deliberately blind could fail to recognize the philosophy penetrating every party, particularly when the pressures of an election are severe.

That the current example was stupid is admitted by the man who set it in motion. The media has been quick to recognize that a ploy so lacking in security safeguards was bound to expose itself sooner or later. I haven't heard the possibility raised that the Kelly tape might have become a hot item in the NDP arsenal within 24 hours of its being recorded at the Social Credit seminar but such things have happened. It isn't unusual for strategy meetings of opposing parties to have their infiltrators.

What does surprise and appal me is that there were so many subscribing champions of democracy who, encountering what the tape advocated, remained outwardly undisturbed until the inevitable overtook them. None may ever have read Karl Marx but Communism's dictum about the ends justifying the means has never been a secret. It is justified in the achievement of power, the argument goes, because there is no human morality.

Accepting that this simply escaped Mr. Kelly and those who considered his advice, there is a greater reason for concern, It is that the fail-safe, the human morality claimed by both sides of the house and now setting the alarm gongs clanging, wasn't automatically triggered when it should have been.

What has surfaced is something which finger-pointing won't correct.

Extreme as the thought may be, some party honestly dedicating itself to telling it like it is may yet guarantee itself a long stay under the dome on James Bay. The Kelly tape, misguided though it was, might yet prove blunt enough to encourage the risking of a second rate ambitions for a first class idea. Vulnerable and all as the ideal remains, the dynamic it has inspired across the centuries still goes with it — to be claimed in earnest or lost by default. — Frederick B. Watt, 1101 Hila Street.

Volunteers next

Thanks to Max Low for his article about the patient ombudsman at Victoria General Hospital.

A word about volunteer programs. Since the Jubilee and Victoria General Hospitals were contrasted, I must correct the impression that there is no volunteer program operating at this hospital. Victoria General has an active auxiliary which holds service to patients as a priority.

The Jubilee Hospital has two separate organizations using volunteers — a volunteer program encompassing Volunteens, play ladies, emergency hostesses and admitting hostesses, etc. and an auxiliary organization fulfilling the more traditional role of fund raising. Victoria General Hospital Auxiliary encompasses both the functions of service to patients and money-raising. Its members volunteer their time to bring library books, flowers and sundries to patients, and to assist with feeding elderly patients. They have also financed much needed services to the hospital, e.g. the Psoriasis Clinic.

I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the generous efforts of the volunteer auxiliary members working at Victoria General Hospital. Maybe Max could do a column on the interesting history and work of the auxiliary. — Jo Dixon, Patient Ombudsman, Victoria General Hospital.

All quiet on the Petro-Can front

By GARRY FAIRBAIRN

OTTAWA (CP) — Like the hapless soldiers of the First World War, Petro-Canada's 2,000 employees are lying low, watching the heavy artillery fly overhead and hoping no shell lands on their particular patch of ground.

While Ottawa's political forces trade barrages over this week's report advocating the reorganization and "privatization" of the national oil company, one official said Thursday, "we're just sitting in the trenches, keeping quiet."

In Petro-Canada's case, the "trenches" extend from drillships 320 kilometres east of Newfoundland, through rigs in desolate Arctic islands and Saskatchewan's seas of grain, to pipelines that twist through mountainous British Columbia.

Since its creation only four years ago, the Calgary-based Crown corporation has mushroomed into a far-flung empire, the largest Canadian-owned oil company and about the sixth largest oil company in Canada. The major foreign-owned firms are bigger.

Its activities include almost every phase of the oil and natural gas industry, from long-term frontier exploration to petrochemical plants.

The extent of Petro-Canada's empire and its dramatic growth inspired some employees to compose a song to the tune of This Land is Your Land.

The song, however, also reflects the way this growth has been achieved: By purchase of existing companies "... from Atlantic Richfield to Pacific Petroleums ..."

Of the 2,000 Petro-Canada employees, in fact, more than half were bought in the controversial takeovers.

Petro-Canada's large stake in eastern offshore exploration came primarily from the $342 million purchase of Atlantic Richfield Co. of Canada Ltd. in 1976.

Last year, it gained a substantial part of Alberta's oil acreage with the $1.5-billion takeover of Pacific Petroleums Ltd.

Its role in the far north was launched at high speed with a generous gift: The federal government handed the new-born Crown corporation all the 45-per-cent federal share in Panarctic Oils Ltd., chief explorer in the Arctic Islands, plus preferential rights to federal lands.

Sensitive to charges that it had contributed nothing to energy resources except altered listings in oil directories, Petro-Canada was able, much to the relief of its Liberal parents, to announce two natural gas discoveries just before voters cast ballots in the last federal election.

But those and several later discoveries were not wholly Petro-Canada's — each was achieved in partnership with private companies.

"I don't think we've drilled a well on our own," Petro-Canada chairman Wilbert Hopper said in an interview early this year. "We normally seek out joint venture partners and bring them in with us."

That, however, was not an admission of inadequacy but an assertion of a well-managed role in general energy development.

In addition to giving Petro-Canada the benefit of additional opinions on prospective areas, Hopper said, the partnership approach — also followed by most private firms — aids its mission of ensuring new energy resources for the future: "We want to stretch our own capital resources and do as much as we can. If we can get the private sector to come in with us, it means we save some money and put it on someplace else."

The strategy of gaining a beachhead through takeovers and then expanding it with allies makes it hard to point to any single development that would not have happened anyway in Petro-Canada's absence. But it has also given the corporation — and the government — a comprehensive base.

For a cost to the government of less than $900 million, including the gift of shares in Panarctic and in the Syncrude oilsands plant in Alberta, Ottawa now owns through Petro-Canada:

—300 million barrels of oil and liquid natural gas reserves.

—4.2 trillion cubic feet of natural gas reserves in Western Canada alone, plus vast potential gas resources in the frontier areas.

—375 retail gasoline outlets and 55 bulk gasoline plants.

—a small refinery at Taylor in northeast British Columbia.

—varying but substantial interests in Panarctic, Syncrude, the planned Alsands oilsands plant, B.C. pipeline companies, and a natural gas liquid plant at Empress, Alta.

The future potential is even greater. In oil and gas resources, Petro-Canada has a good chance to gain a large share in any major new discoveries since it was involved in 16 of the 26 frontier wells drilled last year.

It is also in a long-term major project to develop Saskatchewan's extensive heavy oil reserves.

It has also played a large part in helping plan the $7-billion-plus Polar Gas pipeline from the Arctic, the $1.5-billion Arctic Pilot Project to ship Arctic gas in tankers, and the $1-billion Q and M extension of gas pipelines to the Maritimes. It is into Saskatchewan uranium exploration too.

The corporation has also ensured it will get a piece of future technological breakthroughs, investing in various experiments in heavy oil and oil sands recovery as well as starting construction on a $10-million petroleum research centre in Calgary.

Like othe Canadian-based companies large and small, it is also taking a flyer on international hot spots, gaining exploration rights in the Norwegian sector of the North Sea, the United States and the Spanish Mediterranean. It may also become involved in Chinese offshore exploration.

In total, the assets are valued at $3.5 billion, four times the government's direct investment. Domestic and foreign borrowing has enabled Petro-Canada to finance the expansion, backed by government guarantees of the debts.

Valued by earnings, however, Petro-Canada would scarcely seem like a profitable investmemt. Profits were $9.5 million in 1977, $13.7 million last year, and a likely $3 million this year.

To make Petro-Canada at all attractive for private investment, the heavy debt load and heavy involvement in high-cost distant-payoff frontier areas would have to be reduced.

That was spelled out by Petro-Canada vice-president Joel Bell, who told Alberta financial analysts early this year that massive involvement in high-risk frontier areas is incompatible with having private-sector shareholders:

"While each project is itself viable for a commercial entity having a large enough base of currently-profitable ventures, the sum total of projects and frontier activities would not appeal to a purely profit-conscious investor."

Economic ills not over yet

TORONTO (CP) — Canadians should keep a close watch on economic developments in the United States, where conditions are bound to worsen before they improve, a former U.S. treasury secretary said Friday.

Michael Blumenthal said the "long-term economic problems, the short-term political calendar and the deeply-ingrained inflation mentality" in his country combine to make an early solution to the woes impossible.

But he told businessmen the "likelihood is almost zero" that conditions could lead to a depression like the one that shook the world 50 years ago.

"Conditions are entirely different. The markets and the economy could fall but we have a lot of safety nets today. However, we all have to tighten our belts.

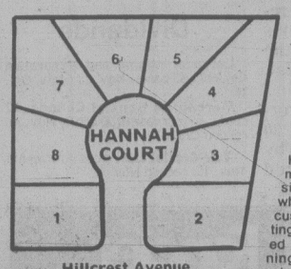

Blumenthal, whose association with President Carter ended in an abrupt cabinet shakeup this summer, said the Carter administration is not responsible for all of the U.S. problems.

Many of the problems go back to the 1960s when the U.S. was financing the Vietnam war in the wrong way and not preparing for the later energy crunch.

Blumenthal was addressing 600 people attending a $50-a-plate luncheon sponsored by Universal Speakers Inc.

IBM beats anti-monopoly rap after 6 year fight

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — A federal judge ruled Thursday in favor of the International Business Machines Corp. in a marathon anti-monopoly suit brought against the computer firm by a rival company.

The ruling by U.S. District Judge Robert Schnacke ended a six-year legal battle by the Transamerica Computer Corp. to prove that IBM had monopolized the computer industry for its own benefit.

The judge ruled that IBM did not possess monopoly power, did not violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and that Transamerica was not injured by IBM business practices.

Transamerica, a subsidiary of the Transamerica Corp., had sought actual damages of $90 million to $130 million which would have been trebled under anti-monopoly law.

A spokesman for Transamerica said the company has no comment until it sees the judge's ruling.

A jury deliberated for 10 days in July, 1978, following a six-month trial, but failed to reach a verdict. Both sides agreed then that Schnacke should made the final ruling.

In Armonk, N.Y., IBM Chairman Frank Cary said this is the sixth anti-monopoly decision in IBM's favor.

"Once again I am delighted that these repetitious allegations have been soundly rejected," he said.

Transamerica Computer alleged that IBM attempted to monopolize the electronic system market for "general purposes."

IBM contended that Transamerica failed to define what a legally-relevant market is or failed to show that any of the alleged acts caused injury.

Company reports

Alcan

Alcan Aluminium Ltd. has reported net consolidated profit for the third quarter of 1979 of $101.8 million, or $2.51 a share, compared with $69.3 million, or $1.72 a share, for the the same period last year.

Alcan said in a statement Friday consolidated sales had also increased to $1,057.7 million from $910.7 million a year ago.

Results for the nine-month period were $305.6 million, or $7.55 a share in 1979, against $206.2 million, or $5.10 a share, in 1978.

Provigo

Provigo Inc. has reported net profits of $9.6 million, or $2.19 a share, for the 28 weeks ended Aug. 11, up 43 per cent from $6.7 million, or $1.58 a share, a year earlier.

The higher profits were made on a sales increase of 15 per cent, to $1.2 billion from $1 billion.

Provigo is a holding company for subsidiaries engaged in wholesale and retail distribution of food, drugs, tobacco and general merchandise throughout Canada and part of the United States.

Inco

Inco Ltd. announced an extra dividend for shareholders Thursday as well as improved results for the latest nine-month period.

Third-quarter profit rose to $55.9 million (U.S.), or 67 cents a share, from $9.8 million, or six cents a share, a year earlier.

The latest quarter profit includes a $24.1-million tax credit related to a British tax change. Figures for the 1978 period are unusually low as a result of start-up costs and strike expenses related to a long shutdown of the Sudbury, Ont., operations.

Gibraltar

Gibraltar Mines Ltd. has reported net earnings of $16,005,000 or $1.40 a share for the nine months ended Sept. 30, compared with a loss of $1,527,000 or 13 cents a share for the corresponding period in 1978.

Revenue for the nine months this year totalled $52,846,000 compared with $22,070,000 in the corresponding period in 1978.

N.B. Cook

Vancouver-based N.B. Cook Ltd. reported the highest first-quarter profits in its 10-year history and a 472 per cent increase over the same period last year.

Net income for the three months ended Aug. 31 was $2.7 million or 93 cents a share, compared to $491,000 or 16 cents a share in the same period last year.

Pine Point

Pine Point Mines Ltd. has day reported net earnings of $34.5 million or $7.64 per share for the nine months ended Sept. 30, compared to $7.5 million or $1.67 per share for the corresponding period in 1978.

The company, in a prepared statement, said strong lead and zinc prices are mostly responsible for the improved earnings.

Why no outcry on tankers? — Glazier

Capital Region District chairman Murray Glazier today said he shares the frustration of former provincial Liberal leader David Anderson who wants to know why Victoria does not have an official spokesman at the National Energy Board hearings on tanker traffic.

"There must be times when Mr. Anderson feels he is fighting this battle alone. I can't understand why more people are not speaking out."

Glazier, who will make an intervention at the hearings in Vancouver next week, said he is bewildered by lack of action taken by senior governments to protect B.C.'s coastline.

The issue has been debated for several years and now the time for decision is near. He predicted federal and provincial officials would be "scrambling about at the last minute" when it was too late to take effective action.

Glazier is appearing on behalf of the community, having conducted hearings in Victoria in July, and not as CRD chairman.

The CRD does not have any official responsibility on tanker traffic or cleanup and has no legal basis for an effective intervention, he said.

At issue is the pipeline route to deliver Alaska oil to the central U.S.

NEB hearings in Vancouver are dealing with proposals to bring oil either to the outside coast of Washington State or to Port Angeles or further into Juan de Fuca strait and then deliver the oil by pipeline.

Glazier said the best deal Victoria could make at this point would be to get the oil port as far away as possible, on the outside coast of Washington.

Barring tankers from Juan de Fuca strait should be the main focus.

Meanwhile, Anderson attended the hearings this week and said he was amazed to see no one from Victoria.

He said the capital city has a larger stake in the issue than anyone.

The tourist industry, for example, would be devastated by a major oil spill. A spill in Brittany caused 12 million hotel night cancellations, he said.

Anderson said he was pleased Glazier was intervening as a citizen but thought it would be more effective to have Mayor Mike Young make a presentation.

"What they need to see is someone wearing a chain of office."

Mayor Young was in Vancouver on a tourist blitz and not available for comment.

Hayes vows public market

A public market in Centennial Square beside city hall will be established by Ald. John Hayes if he is elected mayor, the candidate announced Friday.

He proposed that the market be open Wednesdays and Saturdays, providing "a much-needed downtown outlet for farmer's produce, fish, homebaked goods, etc.

"Local crafts people could display their wares and charitable organizations would be assured of a place for fund-raising sales."

Hayes said some may suggest the commercial supermarkets may be peeved at his proposal "but they abandoned downtown years ago."

Other than the successful Folkfest celebration every spring, the square has not lived up to its expectations as a people place, he said.

"Yet, as a market place site it offers all the advantages of parking and location on a main shopping street between Eaton's and The Bay."

Trestle tables and awnings could be easily stored in the centennial parkade and city maintenance staff would be available close by to clean up at closing time.

"I see the market place as a colorful shoping attraction for downtown — it will be a fun place to be."

It was Alvin who tired on way to first victory

By BILL WALKER

It was a day of firsts Friday on the second day of the Capital City Turf Club's 16-day thoroughbred meeting at Sandown Park.

First of all, 19-year old jockey Alvin Gibson of Vancouver won his first race on a recognized race track, then Sporting Goods dealer and local sportsman Ray Turcotte became the first local owner to win a feature here this season.

Gibson, who had been riding in the bushes this summer and had scored one victory plus "a bunch of seconds", was in only his third race on an official track. And he came home in front on the three-year-old grey filly Spirit Talk in the very first race for a surprising $8.50 win payoff.

Turcotte scored his stable victory with the four-year-old bay gelding Earl Of Bon, ridden by Mark Walker, in the feature.

Gibson was a little excited about his initial win.

"It felt real good," he said. "And I was the one who got tired, not the horse," he said of the close finish as Sonoita Doll hung tough in the stretch drive.

"I guess I'm just not fit," he said. "I haven't been riding that much."

"And yes, I got the water treatment, the polish, everything," he said of his maiden victory.

Gibson, a graduate of Sir Charles Tupper Senior Secondary School, said his plan is to stay with riding for a couple of years at Ex-Park "to see how it goes.

"Anything can happen now," he enthused.

Turcotte was probably just as excited. He should have been because the Earl Of Bon, which he claimed for $5,000 on Aug. 29, was in a three-horse photo finish with Town Prowler and Big Midget before getting the decision.

The highly-favored Earl Of Bon returned $4.20, $3.00 and $3.40.

It was the second win for Turcotte with Earl Of Bon since the claim to go with two place finishes and one fourth-place result.

Pat Owen, the only woman rider at the meeting, got her first win and her fifth of the 1979 campaign, with an easy six-length margin on the mare Little Larder ($15.30) in the third.

Owen, it may be recalled, scored her first win ever at Sandown last year on Major Return. She won four races at Exhibition Park this season.

Andy Smith was the top rider of the day with two winners.

Smith was up on Spirit Perch ($6.90) in the fifth and Advocate General ($6.80) in the eighth.

Otherwise, in a day of mixed returns, Julies Must ($37.10) and Allez Miss combined to provide the healthiest quinella of the afternoon, $165.60, in the fourth and Commander Jim ($17.30), a bit of an overlay, and Jewel Of The West combined for an even richer Exactor of $177.30 in the sixth.

The crowd was 1,622, up 139 from Wednesday's opener but the mutuel handle was only $96,604, down $26,978 from the corresponding day last year.

History played a part in the day's proceedings as well when Jimmy Sievewright Jr., a son of a distinguished father of the same name, made his debut.

It wasn't that noteworthy, however, as Sievewright's mount, Citizens Award, slammed into My Son Eclipse on the break in the eighth race and lost all chance.

Jim Sievewright Sr. rode Cranky Pranky at the first Sandown meeting in 1955 and was at the track Friday to see his son ride.

Bowlers continue torrid tenpin tune

Tenpinners are away to a booming start in the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the Week contest.

In the opening week of this season's competition, Alex Holowachuk blistered the pins for a 694 count in his three-game series to take the men's tenpin award and Audrey Malkewich included a 212 game in leading the ladies with a 586 total.

Two former Bowler-of-the-Year champions have continued the torrid tenpin tune in the second week of the 26-week event.

Lorna Pollock, hitting for games of 226, 193 and 189, set the pace in women's section with a 608 tally in the Victoria Mixed League at Mayfair Lanes.

Ken Grexton, improving in each game during Allstars League play at Mayfair, earned the men's award with a sizzling 204-230-253 — 687 series.

Belonging feeling detected in Oilers

By The Canadian Press

After his Quebec Nordiques were dumped 6-3 by Edmonton Oilers on Friday, coach Jacques Demers had a friendly warning for established National Hockey League clubs: Beware of Blair MacDonald, Wayne Gretzky and Company.

"Anybody who says that he (MacDonald) or Wayne Gretzky can't play in the NHL is sadly mistaken," Demers said. "They're going to surprise a lot of teams like Boston and Philadelphia."

MacDonald connected for three goals, linemate Brent Callighen scored twice and Gretzky added three assists to lead the hustling Oilers to their first NHL victory before a full house of 15,386 at Edmonton.

"He was a one-man wrecking crew," Demers said of MacDonald, who now has five goals and three assists in five games this season. "He kills penalties better than anyone in the NHL, backchecks like a trooper, and he can score."

The Nordiques lost the services of sharpshooter Marc Tardif, who scored twice and added an assist before spraining his knee late in the game. The veteran left winger, who was injured on a hit from Stan Weir, was expected to be out of action for a few days.

In other games Friday, Winnipeg Jets rallied to defeat Minnesota North Stars 3-2, Toronto Maple Leafs beat Washington Capitals 5-3 and Hartford Whalers downed Los Angeles Kings 6-3.

Defenceman Doug Hicks had the other Edmonton goal as the Oilers took period leads of 2-1 and 5-2. Serge Bernier had Quebec's third goal.

In Winnipeg, rookie Ron Wilson's first NHL goal, a power-play marker with less than four minutes left, helped Jets past Minnesota.

The teams exchanged goals in the first two periods, Peter Marsh scoring for Winnipeg and Steve Payne for Minnesota, and Payne's second goal of the night, on a setup by Bobby Smith, put the North Stars ahead 2-1 early in the third period.

Peter Sullivan's third goal of the season for the Jets tied the game midway through the third period and set the stage for Wilson's winner.

At Landover, Md., Washington coach Danny Belisle complained that soft ice slowed down his Capitals and helped the Leafs to their second straight victory. Darryl Sittler led the Toronto attack with two goals and an assist, while Dave Burrows, Dave Williams and Dan Maloney each scored once. Bengt Gustafsson scored his third and fourth goals of the season for the Capitals and Tom Rowe had the other.

The soft ice hurt Washington more than the Leafs, Belisle said, because the Capitals are "a skating team and Toronto isn't as fast as we are."

In Springfield, Mass., two goals by Mark Howe helped the Whalers to their first NHL victory after two losses and two ties.

"Our problems have been basically defensive," Kings' coach Bob Berry suggested. While line of Charlie Simmer, Marcel Dionne and Dave Taylor is 1-2-3 in the scoring race, the Kings have given up an average of five goals a game and sport a 2-2-1 record.

Rookie Ray Allison, Bill Bennett, Blaine Stoughton and Al Sims had the other Hartford goals. Simmer scored two goals, bringing his league-leading total to eight, and Butch Goring had the other.

The 'Deadly Ds' put Cats to test

Thanks to Saskatoon Blades, Victoria Cougars remain the only undefeated team in the Western Hockey League but the Cats' unbeaten streak will be put to its biggest test of the young season tonight in Memorial Arena.

The West Division-leading Cougars, 7-0, face the high-scoring Lethbridge Broncos, a team expected to be one of the powers in the Eastern Division.

Game time is 8:30.

And it may be a big test for Grant Fuhr, the 17-year-old rookie who is scheduled to start in goal for Cougars. Beaten only five times in three games, Fuhr is among the netminding leaders with a glossy 1.67 goals-against average.

Because coach Jack Shupe alternates stopping assignments between Fuhr and Kevin Eastman, the rookie gets to face the highest-scoring team in the league. Lethbridge, sparked by the offensive leadership of its "Deadly Ds" — Doug Williams, Doug Morrison and Duane Sutter — has scored a leading 55 goals for a per-game average of just over six.

Williams (15 goals), Morrison (12) and Sutter (five in six games) have accounted for more than half of Broncos' total. All three were drafted as underage players by National Hockey League teams but returned to Lethbridge to complete their junior eligibilty.

Cougars go into the game with captain and defenceman Mark Robinson on the ailing list. Robinson missed the past two practices because of a hip-pointer but is expeced to dress tonight.

Saskatoon dealt handed Calgary Wranglers their first setback, 5-3, in one of three games played Friday. Overage Dan Bent, playing despite a rib injury suffered in Victoria Tuesday, scored twice to spark the Blades.

In other games, Medicine Hat Tigers pulled into sole possession of the East lead by defeating Regina Pats 6-3. The Tigers moved two points up on Lethbridge and Brandon Wheat Kings, who pulled in for a share of second by clipping Billings Bighorns 7-4.

Celtics run over Bullets

By Canadian Press

The new-look Boston Celtics are up to their old tricks — running and running and running in the fashion that has earned them 13 National Basketball Association championships.

"We're running so well that we don't even have to set up on offence," newcomer M. L. Carr said Friday night after the unbeaten Celtics rolled to their fourth victory in as many games this season, crushing Washington Bullets 130-93.

"We're pressing, and conditioning is paying off now," said Tiny Archibald.

"We're doing things as a team," added Chris Ford. "We had eight guys in double figures and all 11 guys doing their jobs."

Red Auerbach, the architect of the Celtics' championship era as coach and then general manager, tried to take the club's lopsided victory over Washington, the defending Eastern Conference champion, in stride. However the Celtics' front office boss admitted he was surprised.

"Winning our first four games certainly is a surprise," Auerbach said. "We've got 11 guys out there working their butts off. Give the credit to (new coach) Bill Fitch. He worked them hard in training camp. It was the toughest training camp I've ever seen."

Asked if Fitch ran a tougher training camp then he did as coach, Auerbach grinned and said: "Well, maybe not tougher, but just as tough."

In other games Friday, New York Knicks defeated New Jersey Nets 111-106, Philadelphia '76ers downed Detroit Pistons 112-104, Kansas City Kings dumped Denver Nuggets 107-84, Milwaukee Bucks nipped Phoenix Suns 95-94, Portland Trail Blazers beat Los Angeles Lakers 99-82 and Seattle SuperSonics outlasted San Diego Clippers 106-98.

The Celtics ran the Bullets into the floor. Capitalizing on the fast break, they hit on 51 of 97 floor shots, while the Bullets managed just 32 of 88 field-goal attempts.

Ignore the nautical jargon and enjoy sailing a boat

By JIM CRERAR

You've probably seen those bumper stickers telling everbody the person behind the wheel would rather be sailing.

So would a lot of other people, Phil Foster suspects, but they're frightened off by nautical terminology that befuddles the ordinary landlubber.

Nonsense, says the 32-year-old native of Britain who is beginning a year of physical education study at UVic and instructing sailing in the bargain.

Foster is highly qualified. Involved in sailing all his life, he taught it for the education council in Essex county, northeast of London, and later instructed in the outdoor education program at the University of Edinburgh.

He's a certified instructor and examiner for the Royal Yachting Association, governing body of sailing in Britain.

The Essex County area has produced many Olympic and world class sailors and one of Foster's students at the Wivenhoe Sailing Club in Colchester ended up crewing for Olympic catamaran champion Reg White.

"Most people think sailing is harder than it is," Foster said. "A lot of people have over-jargonized sailing, giving it some kind of mystic.

"You don't need to learn all those nautical terms before you can go in a boat."

A newcomer is more likely to hear Foster explain sailing in laymen's terms

"I'm not going to call it a halyard or a sheet," he said. "I'm going to call it a rope. I'll use terms they know or can relate to, like left and right (instead of port and starboard) or toward the wind or away from the wind (in place of windward and leeward)."

The approach isn't exlusive to Foster. The RYA and the Canadian Yachting Association have also streamlined their instruction manuals to eliminate superfluous terms.

Traditionalists needn't worry, Foster says, because new sailors pick up the lingo quickly.

Obviously, safety is an important aspect of his training courses. He teaches how to stop a boat and how to change position safely.

"I'm not going to put them off by putting them in a situation they can't cope with because they lack knowledge."

What about capsizing, something every sailor experiences sooner or later?

Foster conducts capsizing drills in the UVic pool, if possible before his charges get out on the open water.

Foster inherits a new boat storage compound in Gyro Park. The UVic sailing club, with about 50 members, joined with the Cadboro Bay Sailing Association to build the fenced-in area this fall.

UVic has four Lasers (single-handed racing boats), two Enterprises (for crews of two) and four mini-sails, which are simplified Lasers with smaller sail areas.

Foster is concentrating on recreation sailing and is waiting to hear from the CYA before carrying out testing and certification. He hopes to get CYA approval to set up courses in elementary, intermediate and instructor levels.

The instructors' course will be available to UVic students and the community at large.

Hatalsky 'letting it happen'

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Morris Hatalsky, who says he's simply "letting it happen," has taken one more step toward his first victory on the Professional Golfers Association tour.

The lanky third-year pro carried the lead into today's third round of the $200,000 Pensacola Open.

Hatalsky fired a scrambling three-under par 69 Friday for a 11-under-par 133 total, one stroke better than Bill Kratzert and John Mahaffey.

Hatalsky was in position to win the 1977 Milwaukee Open, but squandered a three-shot lead over the final nine holes to lose.

"I like the way I'm playing right now," Hatalsky said. "I wasn't ready to win at Milwaukee. I became overagressive on the final nine.

"I've learned one thing out here — you can't force the issue. If it's your time to win, you'll win and you just have to let it happen."

The 27-year-old from Daytona Beach, Fla., had to sink three putts of more than 10 feet Friday to save pars and preserve his shaky lead.

"I did have to scramble a lot out there today but I also missed several putts for birdies that could have gone in," Hatalsky said. "So I think it kind of evened out."

Dan Halldorson of Shilo, Man., fired a three-under 69 in the second round to take sole possession of fifth place. Halldorson was three shots off the lead at 136.

Good weather has produced low scores and put the cut at two-under-par 142.

The three other Canadians competing all qualified. Dave Barr of Kelowna shot 69 Friday for 140, followed by George Knudson of Toronto 71-141 and Jim Nelford of Burnaby, 68-142.

Cubans protest boxing expulsion

HAVANA (Reuter) — Cuba will protest its suspension by the Amateur International Boxing Association because it refused to take part in the World Cup tournament in New York.

Manuel Gonzalez Guerra, president of the Cuban Olympic Committee, said every country has a right to decide for itself whether to accept invitations to international competitions.

Weaver tops poll

NEW YORK (AP) — Earl Weaver, who led the American League champion Baltimore Orioles to the best record in major league baseball this season, is The Associated Press' AL Manager-of-the-Year for the third time in his career.

Weaver collected 166 votes from a panel of league sports writers and broadcasters to easily outdistance his nearest competitor, Jim Fregosi of the West Division-winning California Angels. Weaver also won the award in 1973 and 1977.

Gene Mauch of Minnesota Twins finished third in the voting with 41 votes. The only other managers to receive votes in this year's poll were Sparky Anderson of Detroit Tigers, with two, and Milwaukee Brewers' George Bamberger with one.

While winning the AL East Division, Weaver's Orioles compiled a major league-leading 102 triumphs this season, the fourth time that he had reached the 100-victory plateau. Baltimore went on to win the AL pennant, Weaver's fourth, by beating the Angels 3-1 in the best-of-five league championship series before going the full seven-game series in a losing World Series showdown with Pittsburgh Pirates.

From 1969-71, Weaver's teams had three 100-victory seasons with 109, 108 and 101. His record ranks him fourth on the all-time list.

In addition to his three pennants, Weaver, 49, has won six East Division championships and one World Series.

Mt. Doug supports coaches' opinions

It comes as no surprise to Greater Victoria High School Soccer League rivals, but Vancouver circles have recognized Mt. Douglas Thistles as one of the premier sides in British Columbia.

An unofficial poll of provincial coaches tagged Mt. Doug as the No. 1 team in B.C. this week.

The Brian Cornall-coached Thistles supported the claim Friday with a solid 4-1 victory over Spectrum that protected Mt. Doug's four-point hold on first.

Victoria High Tyees solidified their hold on second by scoring a hard-fought 1-0 decision over Oak Bay. Tyees moved four points ahead of Spectrum and Oak Bay.

In Friday's only other game, Claremont Spartans blanked Esquimalt Dockers 3-0.

Defending league champions and third in the B.C. tournament last year, Thistles got two goals each from Rob Wallace and Keith Smith. Michael Kadar scored the only goal for Spectrum, which trailed 2-0 at the half.

A penalty goal by Antonio Noguiera in the 70th minute enabled Tyees to subdue the scrappy Oak Bay team.

Dan Hammick connected twice and Marius Youell scored the other goal in the Claremont victory.

Former alderman, two others face $1M fraud, theft charges the Commerce bank and with defrauding the bank of $286,604.05.

Strong is charged individually with being an agent deceiving the bank in regard to loan documents and with theft of the same amount of money from the bank between Feb. 1 and June 16, 1978. He is also charged with making a false promissory note to the bank in the amount of $3,460 on May 5, 1978, by forging the signature of L.D. Strong.

Hutchison said the total amount of money involved in the bank-related information was $290,064.10.

On the 46-count information dealing with the Donut King franchising scheme, Parkhurst and Strong are charged jointly with nine counts of conspiracy, and one count each of fraud, criminal breach of trust, and theft. Parkhurst is charged separately with three counts of conspiracy, 11 counts each of fraud and theft, and nine counts of criminal breach of trust.

Total amount of money said to be involved is $201,000, Hutchison said.

On the 79-count information dealing with mortgage investments in which Ellis and Parkhurst are charged, there are three joint charges of fraud, criminal breach of trust, theft and one joint count each of conspiracy to defraud the public and conspiracy to defraud an individual. Ellis is charged alone with 22 counts of fraud, and 23 counts each of criminal breach of trust and theft.

Hutchison said the total amount of money involved in the final information came to $442,800.

The charges ended 16 months of investigation by the RCMP commercial crime section, but Sgt. Steve Holotuk added that the investigation is continuing and would not rule out further charges or arrests.

He said officers began investigating in the latter part of October last year and police have talked to at least 100 persons in connection with the case. The first allegation was made in April of last year, he said.

Hutchison said he was appointed special Crown counsel in the case by the attorney-general's ministry about six months ago.

RCMP arrested Strong at his residence at 7:45 a.m. Friday, picked up Ellis at 12:10 p.m. at his residence, and arrested Parkhurst when he turned himself in at 3:45 p.m.

Judge Harold Alder agreed to waive the reading of all but two charges when Strong and Ellis first appeared separately about 2:45 p.m. Parkhurst made his first court appearance about 4:30 p.m.

Hutchison's proposal of release on their own recognizance in the sum of $5,000 was accepted and the trio was remanded until next Friday for election of their trial method.

Hutchison said that, pessimistically, the preliminary hearing could take as long as eight weeks and the trial, if there was a committal, could take as long as three months. With the court lists bulging, Hutchison said it was highly likely that the trial wouldn't be concluded until the spring of 1981.

Car wrecked in crash with bus

A car was demolished and about $2,000 done to the side of a B.C. Hydro bus in a crash at Burnside and Harriet at 6 p.m. Thursday.

No one on the bus, driven by Richard Brown, 30, of 1216 Lonsdale, was injured but the driver of the car, a 34-year-old city man, was taken to Victoria General for treatment of minor injuries.

The car driver was to appear in provincial court today charged with impaired driving.

The scenery 'goes on forever' on the Trans-Siberian Railway

Man-in-motion Ord Anderson received gift of the book Verbs in Motion from his guide

Rail ride to remember, a camel ride to forget

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Ord Anderson considers himself a lucky man.

He has achieved two of his life's ambition at the age of 68 — in one fell swoop.

He's been to the top of Mount Fuji and he's crossed Siberia by train.

Anderson, a retired superintendent of the Canadian Industries Ltd. plant at James Island, has wanted to do both for as long as he can remember.

The reasons why have been lost in time, but that's beside the point.

Last July he boarded a plane at Vancouver and with 13 other members of a tour group headed off on a six-week adventure to the Far East and Russia.

After a three-day stop in Japan, where they climbed Mount Fuji — by bus — the group sailed to Nhakhodka, the major port serving the Soviet Union's Far Eastern Territories.

From there they began a 17,000-kilometre journey that took them to parts of Russia seldom seen by western visitors, exotic-sounding places like Khaborovsk, Irkutsk, Novosibirsk, Alma Ata, Yerevan and Tbilisi.

They went by plane, bus and train and even got a chance to ride a camel in the blistering desert near Ashkabad in remote Turkmenia.

"It took me a week to get my joints back together again after that experience," Anderson joked in an interview at his apartment at 670 Dallas.

He said the tour was "a kind of pleasantly rugged trip."

The highlight for him, of course, was the 5,000-km ride on the Trans-Siberian Railway.

The trip, by electrically-powered train, took eight days.

The scenery was reminiscent of parts of Canada, he said. Except in vast Russia, the scenery goes on forever. Birch forests and fields of pink and purple fireweed stretched as far as the eye could see.

Along the way the train passed patch after patch of potato gardens cultivated next to the wide double track. He said he was told they were the private plots of settlers who are permitted by the state to grow the staple for their own use and sell the surplus in the local markets.

Anderson said he was surprised by the amount of traffic on the rail line. Every three to five minutes a freight screamed past in the opposite direction.

Life aboard the train is an experience in itself. Travellers are bunked in four-berth compartments, he said, and no distinction is made between the sexes.

"That took a bit of getting used to at first," he said.

So did the food. He regreted there was no word in the Russian language for toast. Breakfasts were cold cuts, cucumber slices, cheese and either buttermilk or puree of apply juice. The big meal of the day was lunch, invariably a thick soup followed by a huge plate of meat and potatoes.

Anderson said the group visited schools, factories, countless museums and was taken on a tour of a massive hydro development at Bratsk, on the fringe of the Arctic Circle, 600 km north of Irkutsk.

As the group was sitting in the bus waiting to be taken back to the Bratsk airport, a radio broadcast suddenly captured their attention. It was the Voice of America news hour! It was the only news from home they got until they reached Finland near the end of their journey.

Anderson said he'd expected the worst when he arrived in Russia. He thought he'd be watched like a hawk and would have difficulty meeting the people. The opposite happened.

It helped that he had some knowledge of the language, at least enough to read the Cyrillic script.

While several features of Russia impressed him he said three stand out.

One was the large presence of women in the labor force. Women are involved in every industry. They work on the roads, in the factories, and on the docks. They're as many women professionals as men too. The chief engineer on the Bratsk project was a 40-year-old woman.

The reason, he said, is partly historical. The country still hasn't recovered from its losses in the two world wars. Even today women outnumber men five to three.

Another impressive feature, he said, was the Soviet police. They are more casual than their North American counterparts. They don't carry arms and their patrols are by foot, almost exclusively. In the large cities they're everywhere, directing traffic and nonchalantly walking their beats.

But perhaps the most impressive feature of all was the attention the state gives to educating its youth, particularly youngsters of preschool and kindergarten age.

The facilities are the best he's seen anywhere; the children the happiest.

"I don't know if I would want to be an adult in Russia," he said, "but I sure wouldn't mind being a child."

max low

Coffee was bubbling away in the pot, as usual, when I called in the other day to visit my long-time Shawnigan Lake neighbor and friend Evelyn Barr. But Evelyn was glowing as hot as the coffee and couldn't wait to tell me what she'd been up to.

"I called Joe today and gave him and all the listeners a piece of my mind," she announced even before I'd had the first sip.

You have to know Evelyn Barr to realize that "Joe" can only be radio hotliner Joe Easingwood to whom she listens with the reverence of a Moslem heeding the call of a mullah from the minaret of a mosque. She is such an avid fan of his program, in fact, that she refers to the radio station as "Joe's Place."

"I've been listening for the last hour and all I've heard people do is gripe, gripe, gripe!" Evelyn told Easingwood. "Isn't there anyone out there who can say anything happy? I was born in 1904 and I can tell you we've got a lot more to be thankful for today than we've ever had before."

Joe was lost for words for a moment or two — which doesn't happen to him very often, Evelyn admitted with a chuckle.

"But I was sick of hearing everyone who phoned in bellyaching about gasoline prices going up, the cost of living soaring, the Boat People coming and just about everything else that's happening today," she said. "Sure, we've got to face these things . . . but we don't have to let them get us down."

And you know, Evelyn is right. For it seems that too often we allow changing circumstances or conditions — even a switch in the weather — to affect our outlook and our state of mind. If in the spring a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of romance, in the fall (with visions of the damp and cold ahead) it turns to thoughts of gloom.

Perhaps in the fall we should program our mind to think of things that are happy and, instead of bellyaching and feeling sorry for ourselves, to think of what we can do to help others and to make conditions better.

Like John Stearn does.

Every fall for the last 29 years, the retired Langford resident, though bothered considerably by arthritis, has packed up clothing he has collected and driven up to the remote parts of northern B.C. to hand it out to residents who are down on their luck.

John is poised for his 30th annual trek but the journey that should be a landmark one in his lifetime is jeopardized because he has little money, no truck and (for the first time) very few clothes. And part of that is my fault.

You see, I told readers about John Stearn this time last year and said, because he'd had no luck getting financial backing and was on a pension, his 29th trip would most likely be his last.

That was the bad news and the good news came later when Goldstream Kiwanis invited John to become a member and said they'd sponsor his trips if he wanted to continue them.

Last year, the Kiwanis paid for his ferry fares and for the gasoline for the return trip but John says the club spent all its money this year doing up the docks and floats at the Lake Cowichan summer camp.

"So this time, I'm on my own again," he explains. And the trouble is a lot of people who read last year's story think he's no longer doing it. Consequently, where he had 99 boxes of clothing for his 29th trip, John has filled only 30 boxes so far this time.

If you have any new things that don't fit or any good used clothing and would like to help John Stearn fill a few more boxes, you can call him at 478-1838 or deliver it to his yard at 628 Atkins in Langford.

John plans to leave at the end of this month and hopes that by then someone will come up with a truck he can use. He says he'll head straight for Hixon, which is between Prince George and Quesnel, and find out (as usual) from B.C. Forest Service rangers where the clothing is most needed.

"I'd like to thank all the women in Sidney who have been knitting clothing all year for me to take and I want to let them and all the people know I'll keep making these trips each fall for as long as they support me," John says.

"You know Max, in the summer I watched a TV program which discussed poverty and what various groups were doing about it," John adds. "Well, all they were doing was talking about it. But in my own way I'm trying to do something positive about it."

This — a man living with the discomfort of arthritis and driving on through life to help others — is the very kind of thing Evelyn Barr means when she says let's stop bellyaching and be happy and thankful for what we have.

When Joe Easingwood finally did recover from her onslaught, he said she had brought "a breath of fresh air from Shawnigan Lake."

And that was a lot kinder than he'd been the previous time she'd phoned.

"Last time he called me a Pollyanna but I don't mind," Evelyn said. And she quickly produced a little piece from the Reader's Digest which advises as you go through life to:

Gather the crumbs of happiness and they will make you a loaf of contentment.

Alarms via cable?

A licence to offer experimental alarm service in part of Saanich on community cable television is sought by Victoria Cablevision Ltd. from the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

Application is made to provide fire and burglar alarms and medical alert on channels J and T8 of the midband in a self-contained package, not as part of normal programming.

In March the commission approved requests by three Ontario cable broadcasters to offer alarm services and consumer information experimentally for two years.

No advertising may accompany the new services.

Battle lines sharply set for Saanich mayoralty

Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier announced today he will seek re-election, battling challenger Keith MacGregor on the issue of development versus conservation.

MacGregor, a retired brigadier-general and a director of the Cadboro Bay Residents Association, said Friday he will seek the mayor's job, calling Couvelier pro-developer and himself pro-conservationist.

"If Mr. MacGregor believes Saanich should not expand its commercial base I will be happy to debate him on that issue on the campaign trail," Couvelier said today.

"Without a larger commercial base Saanich taxes will rise so high that people would have to move away."

Couvelier said labels can often be misleading and unfair.

Some additional development is needed if only to preserve the quality of life in Saanich, he said. At present 87 per cent of tax revenues come from residential homes, the highest ratio of any major urban municipality in the province.

Preserving the status quo could result in financial chaos.

"I do not favor wall-to-wall housing. We must work harder to preserve our greenbelt areas. But we can't just do nothing because the pressures get stronger every year."

Housing, he said, must be expanded in the western communities so Saanich can protect its greenbelts and maintain the line on urban containment. Some additional commercial expansion is needed, but no other major shopping centres beyond those already proposed.

MacGREGOR
. . . "preserve the charm"

MacGregor, who was with the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry until his retirement last year, said Saanich will become an unattractive, crowded suburb within a decade unless commercial expansion is checked. The competition with downtown Victoria is unnecessary, he said.

"Saanich is the finest place in Canada in which to live and it should be conserved and preserved in all its grace, spaciousness and charm," MacGregor said.

"I feel strongly that citizens should have a clear choice and chance to save Saanich from the fate of most big city suburbs."

He said the mayor had made "a mockery" of democracy by overriding the wishes of residents after public hearings.

Couvelier today agreed that, also, could become a campaign issue.

"On occasion it is necessary to override the wishes of a local community for the benefit of the municipality as a whole. On other occasions we have compromised or accepted the wishes of the local citizens.

"The important thing is that, after years of stagnation in Saanich, we have made decisions during my term as mayor and I am proud of that fact."

He said five stalled issues he inherited were North Quadra lot size, where council accepted the views of residents and made them larger; Royal Oak industrial park, where council compromised with Royal Oak residents; Minnie Mountain, where council proceeded against the wishes of the neighborhood; Cordova Bay sewering, which will be resolved before mid-November; and the community plan, which has been approved in general terms.

"We have taken action or will be taking action on all of them."

Couvelier said he would campaign on that record and on the issue of some limited, controlled development so residential property taxes do not soar.

He was elected mayor two years ago, defeating Ed Lum on his second try.

Scatter the 'blahs'

Pierre Berton Friday revived the six-year-old campaign to get Heritage Day declared a national holiday to remind Canadians of their past and provide a respite from the "February blahs."

See other stories on page 53.

Give Heritage a Break is the slogan of the renewed movement to make the third Monday in February a holiday.

The chairman of the board of Heritage Canada noted that Canada needs a holiday between New Year's and Good Friday. We have only eight public holidays a year, fewer than many major nations. For example, the U.S. has nine and West Germany has 11. Nobody has fewer holidays than Canada.

"Heritage Day ought to celebrate our non-political heritage — those aspects of our cultural and environmental past which help form our roots as Canadians — our landscapes, views, streetscapes and historic buildings."

You never see anyone looking bored or lackadaisical around Standard Furniture. Quite the contrary! . . . That's because there's always something new happening . . . always something changing to make this store a more exciting place to shop in! . . . We saw it this week, and it's really a beautiful store-within-a-store! . . . Just one more reason for you to visit Standard . . . With this expansion, Jordan's can offer you a complete floor covering service . . . Everything you need for beautiful floors throughout your house . . . Wall-to-wall broadlooms . . . Hand-crafted in New Zealand by Knights Tailors . . . every coat has the name of its cutter and maker on the label . . . which goes to show what pride they take in their work! . . . As for prices, you won't believe how reasonable they are! At least $100 cheaper than that of any sheepskin coat we'd ever seen before . . . There's one man's coat that's a steal at $185 . . . A darling little ladies' short jacket with a mandarin collar is a real nice buy at $225 . . . Others range up to $450 . . . Mighty reasonable for a quality sheepskin coat! . . . Monthly pains can be treated

My daughter has severe menstrual cramps. She dreads the oncoming period to such a degree that it seems as if the whole month is devoted to suffering or anticipating. She is 19 years old and takes enormous quantities of aspirin. When I made her stop this she switched to other medicines that don't contain aspirin, but still she takes huge quantitities. I can't believe something can't be done.

Mrs. J. M.

Dear Mrs. M.:

You describe two distinct and important problems. The first, of course, is the painful menstrual cramps, or dysmenorrhea.

For years, it was believed that this is the woman's burden or "curse." Strange myths and fallacies have arisen about the unalterable need for a women to suffer. This is unfounded in fact.

Today, so much is known about dysmenorrhea and its relationship to female hormones that there is almost no need for the menses to be a constant source of dread.

The lead to this first came when it was found that, after childbirth, most women had almost immediate reduction in the severity of their complaints.

A complete gynecological examination, coupled with endocrine studies, can usually track down the basic cause. As for the psychological implications of severe menstrual cramps they are well-known. Stresses within the home, at school, at work and in interpersonal relationships must be carefully studied. Fears and anxieties about menstruation may often magnify the pain.

No one should be allowed to go on with the feeling of despair that painful menstruation is their fate. Almost always it can be controlled and modified.

Now, the second aspect of your daughter's problem needs attention. The massive advertising that has enveloped our nation has insinuated a distrust for aspirin, and has driven people to finding aspirin substitutes.

Yet, relatively unknown is that the aspirin substitutes that "contain no aspirin" can be just as toxic as aspirin if taken in large doses.

Tell your daughter that help is on the way . . . if she contacts her doctor and follows his or her instructions.

Dear Abby:

Your answer to Scared, a woman in a rough neighborhood who has suffered numerous purse snatchings and indecent propositions, who is afraid of being raped, and who wonders about carrying a butcher knife, fell below your usual standard of helpfulness.

You suggested she check with her local police department as to 'what kind of weapon (if any) a citizen is permitted to carry to protect life, limb and pocketbook. The laws differ from one locale to another.' That comment might imply that a weapon does offer some protection.

Not only is the carrying of concealed weapons unlawful in most places, but it is a bad, unsafe idea. A person who pulls a knife on an assailant is very likely to lose more than just a purse; she is likely to be seriously injured in a struggle which most probably would ensue. (Scared herself was badly injured trying to protect her purse.)

For that reason, crime prevention specialists are virtually unanimous in strongly discouraging the general public from carrying deadly weapons, or even keeping them around the home. Many accidental injuries and deaths have resulted from having such weapons at home.

It would be a fine service to your many readers if you would print the following suggestions.

Slade Gorton
Attorney General
Washington State

Out alone at night, try to stay on well-lighted streets; avoid doorways, shrubbery, dark shadows near buildings, alleys and other potential hiding places.

If possible, walk with a friend.

Better yet, take a bus. If there are few people on board, sit near the driver.

In a cab or friend's car, ask the driver to wait until you signal you are safely inside your house.

Don't hitchhike or accept rides from strangers.

Stay away from deserted laundromats or apartment house laundry rooms at night; be cautious even in the daytime.

Be alert in crowds, where pickpockets do their best work.

The safest place for a man to carry his wallet is in an inside or front pocket.

When you take out your wallet, be as discreet as possible in handling your cash. Remember that cash is a strong temptation to the potential robber, so try to avoid carrying it, especially in large amounts. Use checks or credit cards instead.

A woman should hold her handbag firmly and close to her body, preferably toward the front — never dangling at her side. In certain cases, it may be possible to avoid carrying a purse by concealing keys and a wallet in a pocket, for example. That is the best way to avoid having a purse snatched.

Don't leave your purse on a store counter or set it on the floor in restrooms, theaters, restaurants, or other public places.

In Your Car, Keep your doors locked and windows rolled up most of the way.

Don't pick up hitchhikers.

If someone tries to break into your car, honk your horn repeatedly.

If you are being followed, don't drive directly home. Drive to the nearest police station, hospital emergency entrance, all-night restaurant or other safe place.

You should not travel at night when you know you have car trouble or are low on gas.

Look for a well-lighted parking place and lock up.

If you must leave your key with a parking attendant, leave only your car key, never the keys to your house. These can be duplicated while you're gone.

Before getting into your car, check the back seat and floors for someone hiding there.

At Home, A woman living alone should use only her first initial and last name in the phone book and on the mailbox.

Be cautious around elevators; if you are at all suspicious of another passenger, wait for the next car.

When changing addresses, change your locks, too. Install a deadbolt lock with a one-inch 'throw' and a wide-angle viewer so that you can see callers. (A chain guard is not adequate protection in case someone tries to force your door open.)

Always check the I.D. of any repairman, salesman or policeman who wishes to come inside.

Instruct children and baby-sitters not to give out any information about who is home, who is out and for how long.

If you suspect your home has been broken into, don't go in or call out. Call the police from a neighbor's.

Don't leave your keys hidden outside. They're too easily found.

Always lock your doors and windows, draw your shades at night and leave a few lights on.

In Trouble; If a robber demands your valuables, give them up! Your money or your jewelry is not worth risking injury or your life.

Don't carry weapons such as guns and knives. They can easily be turned against you.

Be selective about new acquaintances; don't invite a forcible sexual encounter. But remember, not all rapists are strangers, and you can't tell by appearances.

If you are confronted by a rapist, try to stay calm and think before you react.

Screaming or blowing a whistle may scare him off. Screaming 'Fire!' rather than 'Help!' or 'Rape!' might bring more assistance.

Escape is your best defense. If you are trapped, crying, fainting, becoming hysterical, claiming you have a venereal disease, or pretending you are going to be sick may discourage him.

If the attacker is unarmed, try to employ basic self-defense measures -- kick, bite, punch or scratch. The throat, face, eyes, knees and groin are target areas. He may injure, rape or murder you, so don't worry about hurting him!

If your attacker is armed and threatens to harm you, your child or someone else, you may think twice about physically resisting or attacking him. Remember, though, no one can tell you how to react. You should do what you feel is best for you.

Write down everything you can remember about your assailant; call the police right away.

Do not change your clothing, bathe or apply any medication. Although this would be your natural reaction, don't do it. The physical evidence will be important in the prosecution of the attacker.

Playground hazards

WASHINGTON (AP) — Playground surfaces are a major factor in the almost 100,000 injuries to U.S. children each year that are related to playground equipment, says a government report. The study, conducted for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, said 66,000 of 93,000 injuries to children in 1977 resulted from falls, and 55,000 were falls from equipment such as swings, slides, climbing bars and merry-go-rounds onto the playground surface.

Lumpy Larry's health likely a bit ratty

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller: Is a lumpy rat necessarily a sick rat? I'm asking because Larry has these big bumps all over and they're getting more and bigger all the time. But he's still bright and friendly and eats well.

S. K.

Dear S. K.: I can't say how sick lumpy Larry is, but he certainly isn't as well as he was when he wasn't lumpy. Whether his problem is a skin infection, tumors or something else, he should have professional help.

Dear Dr. Miller: Our family and our friends are all awash with dogs and cats. Always have been. My brother, a lab tech, has observed that a lot of cats we've known have had anemia, but it doesn't seem to happen so much in dogs. In reflecting, I think he's right. Do you? If he is, why might this be?

T. T.

Dear T. T.: Cats definitely are more susceptible to anemia than are dogs. This is in part because their red blood cells don't last as long as they do in a dog, their oxygen carrying hemoglobin is less efficient and their actual comparative numbers of red blood cells is lower. Also, cats are more susceptible to damage of the blood forming tissue from many sources, including bacterial and viral infections and tumors.

Fastidious felines wash their feet and coats and in the process may infest varying degrees of chemical toxins (poisons) which may affect their blood-forming organs. From a practical standpoint, owners rarely observe anemia in a cat — not, that is, unless the condition is very severely advanced and the mucus membranes around the eyes or in the mouth are blanched almost white. The careful cat observer, however — one who routinely checks on the normal colors of mouth and tongue membranes — would probably spot signs of anemia reflected in pale mucus membranes and be alerted to potential danger much earlier.

Dear Dr. Miller: Crafty Pierre, my gerbil, is rather plump. Could this be because he's wild about walnuts? I know he doesn't exercise enough.

D. B.

Dear D. B.: Walnuts would put "pounds" on Pierre, at least when compared to fruit, vegetables and grains. To reduce Crafty's corpulence, wean him away from walnuts.

Dear Dr. Miller: My hermit crab, Tippytoes, keeps on eating the chips of redwood bark I have in his aquarium. Can this be harmful to him? It isn't all he eats of course. He eats quite a bit of hermit crab feed, lettuce, non-sugared cereal and other regular stuff.

K. B.

Dear K. B.: If Tippytoes is stuffing himself with the regular stuff sufficiently, a small amount of redwood bark browsing shouldn't be bothering him.

Novel ideas as Yule nears

knit and chat
with may e. mac lean

Just recently I saw two novel ideas in patchwork which I'll try and describe for you.

The Christmas tree for hanging on a wall or door was of triangles of about 2½ inches deep, or 6.25 cm.

The base color and the triangles which stood upright as you were looking at them were dark-green, while the ones in between were of red-and-white print. I should mention here that the base of each triangle was about 1½ inches or 3.75 cm.

The triangles were assembled in rows as I have said, with the green ones upright, looking like miniature trees. The base of the tree was about 18 inches wide, or 45 cm.

Beginning at the bottom of the tree shape, assemble one row, then add the next row, leaving off one triangle at each end. Continue in this way until you have formed one large triangle or tree shape.

Finish off the back with green material, add a loop at the top for hanging and if you have a scrap of brown material, use this to form a tree trunk. If you would like a larger tree, completely covering a door, for instance, you would have to enlarge the triangles accordingly. It's a novel idea for apartment dwellers or if you do not have room for an actual tree.

The other idea I saw was for place mats, fashioned on the Dresden Plate design. Each section of the "plate" had been enlarged to a depth of about 6 inches or 15 cm.

To do this you will need a compass and paper on which to draw a circle, by setting the compass at 3 inches or 7.50 cm. This will give you a circle 6 inches in diameter or 15 cm across. Now using the compass at the same setting, mark off the circumference in three equal spaces. Join two of these to a centre point, then join the other two with a curve.

This gives you the pattern shape for one section. You will need 12 sections for each place mat and sufficient material to cover the back of the finished shape.

The circle covering the centre joins should be of the backing color also. Lightly pad the place mats and quilt around each shape. Four of these would make a lovely gift.

My leaflet No. 7268 is not exactly the Dresden Plate design, but it is very similar and would be most helpful in working out this idea. This quilt design is called The Sunflower.

Another great gift idea for your friends who have everything! A needlepoint backgammon board! Which can be worked with Anchor Stranded Cotton or tapastry wool. Complete instructions are given on Leaflet No. 7961.

To order this week's pattern No. 7961 or any other leaflet mentioned, send 75 cents for each plus a stamped, self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have a stamp or envelope, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of mailing and print your name and address. Send to: May E. MacLean, Knit and Chat, c/o Victoria Times, 486 Montford Dr., Dollard des Ormeaux, Roxboro, Que., H9G 1M6

Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly when ordering and to enclose your stamped return envelope for faster service. Allow two weeks for normal delivery.

All back numbers of my series are available for 75 cents each, while the catalogue of gift and bazaar items is 25 cents. All orders must be accompanied with a stamped return envelope or an extra 25 cents.

Cigarette threat rated

OTTAWA (UPC) — Health Minister David Combie, a former smoker, has urged Canadians to give up the habit following the release of his department's annual survey of cigarette brands.

Of 102 different brands, the health department survey said the regular-size package of filter-tipped Viscount No. 1, Ultra Mild, had the lowest levels of tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide.

The "heaviest" cigarette containing the highest levels of tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide was Dudes Filter Tip King Size. Tests showed it had 21.4 milligrams of tar, 1.34 milligrams of nicotine and 24.4 milligrams of carbon monoxide, said the survey released this week by the department of health.

The tests, conducted by an independent laboratory, showed Viscount No. 1 had 1.2 milligrams of tar, 0.09 milligrams of nicotine and 1.7 milligrams of carbon monoxide.

The department said it was the first time extensive testing has been done on the levels of carbon monoxide which has been implicated in heart disease, atherosclerosis, chronic respiratory disease and fetal growth retardation.

Only records of tar and nicotine levels now appear on cigarette packages.

The survey showed that although results varied, carbon monoxide levels decreased with lower levels of nicotine and tar.

Crombie urged smokers to give up the habit because there is "no safe cigarette" and "no safe way to smoke."

"We strongly recommend that Canadians avoid cigarette smoking entirely ... because it is probably the most serious single health hazard," said the former Toronto mayor who gave up a heavy smoking habit this summer.

For those unable to butt out easily, Crombie outlined a five-point plan to reduce the chances of contracting cancer of the mouth and increased blood pressure.

He advised smokers to lengthen the period between smoking and between puffs, avoid inhaling, remove the cigarette from the mouth after each puff and throw away butts. Tar and nicotine are collected in the butt end.

"Of course, the most effective action is not to smoke at all," said Crombie.

Gifted get the same

TORONTO (CP) — Gifted children should be treated the same as other children in the classroom, says an English psychologist.

Joan Freeman of Manchester, author of a book called Gifted Children, says it's good for children of varying abilities to rub shoulders with one another.

"I think it's bad for the rest of the children if you take away this top two per cent. They can do a lot for the other 98 per cent."

Second time round is more fun

By JOHN LEONARD
New York Times

NEW YORK — While I am not, of course, recommending them for everybody, second marriages are generally fun, and these days seem to last longer, as if the veterans of foreign wars, their scars glowing in the dark, had turned in their swords for ploughshares. Innocence is overrated. The second time around, we know who can be expected to burn the coffee and who can be relied on to fall asleep in the middle of an argument about structuralism or bad faith. Defects of character have already been identified. Time is running out. Amateur hour is over.

The difference between men and women, I am convinced, is that women always think to sharpen the pencils, whereas men are merely gratified to find the pencils sharpened. Perhaps, in a second marriage, a man will sharpen a pencil. Probably not.

It helps, too, if the sun chooses to shine on the occasion. The green lawn — I am tempted to say "sward," but only sportswriters are permitted to say sward — looked as though it were waiting for a Brobdingnagian game of croquet. There were more folding chairs than there were bees. The ghosts in the trees shut up.

Children also help: little boys in jackets and ties, little girls in white stockings and long dresses. My feelings about little boys in jackets and ties are a mixed grill. I have never even seen the point of big boys in jackets and ties. If I ever intended to die, I would do so in a turtleneck. But little girls in white stockings and long dresses bring out the repressed sexist pig in me. To see them on the green lawn under the ghostly trees is to commune, in perfect sympathy, with the shade of Lewis Carroll. Fathers, in first marriages, think we want sons — until, mysteriously, a daughter is conferred on us and we learn, in our vast clumsiness, how to love.

There was a Dixieland band at the wedding, playing show tunes. I had never been to a wedding before with a Dixieland band; it is a considerable improvement on Lester Lanin. There was also a dog, a big, old, friendly and exhausted dog, belonging to the couple to be married. An usher led the dog to the first row of folding chairs, where four generations of family had gathered; the dog behaved impeccably. I'm in favor of more weddings with dogs and Dixieland bands.

The designated groom made a speech. He explained that some years ago he and the bride-to-be had, "with some malice aforethought," broken up their respective lives. They had spent the interim rebuilding a new life together. Now they were confident in that life. Their marriage, then, was a kind of statement, which we were asked to witness, along with the dog. The bride-to-be — beautiful, of course, and so was her sister, and so were the afternoon and the statement — also spoke up, thanking us for being witnesses. This, she said, was one of the few occasions on which she would have less to say than her husband-to-be. Everybody laughed except the dog.

Laughter, statements, sunlight, dogs, Dixieland bands and weddings are all good ideas.

The rabbi did what rabbis do. In my experience, rabbis are more comfortable at unconventional weddings than Episcopalian ministers tend to be, although slightly less comfortable than the one criminal court judge I happen to have met.

Husband and wife, as is required, drank from the same cup. Knowing the husband and knowing the wife, I had reason to believe that what they drank was likely to be Pepsi-Cola, but, like the ghosts in the trees, I kept my mouth shut. So did the dog.

Immediately, there was a receiving line on the green lawn. At one end of the line was the groom's father, at the other end, his mother. They hadn't seen each other in 30 years. The father had come from Mexico. Such is the magnetism of weddings: We arrive, by train or plane or parcel post, from New York and North Carolina and Berkeley, Calif., and Mexico. Such is the peculiarity of second marriages, ours and others', that we find ourselves surrounded by familiar heads attached to strange bodies, men belonging to the wrong women, names that seem to have changed by stealth at night, faces from which names have been snatched and fed to Ormazd, histories that slumber like the dog.

As it happens, we were staying for the weekend in the apartment of the groom's ex-wife. You don't choose between friends. Your friends choose you.

Why is it that the omelets at large catered parties are invariably overcooked? One would think that, with so many people clamoring for food, they would be undercooked. Otherwise, it was a class act all the way, including a hamper of excellent imported beer for the champagne-weary. We left before the folk-singing and glass-breaking; we had trains to catch and pencils to sharpen. Still, as Ben Jonson said to King James I:

Our King and Queen, the Lord-God bless,
The Paltzgrave, and the Lady Besse,
And God bless every living thing
That lives and breathes and loves the King.
God bless the Council of Estate,
And Buckingham, the fortunate.
God bless them all, and keep them safe,
And God bless me, and God bless Raph.

Asked by the King who Raph was, Jonson explained, according to Aubrey's Brief Lives: " ... 'twas the drawer at the Swanne tavernne, by Charing-crosse, who drew him good Canarie." It is further reported: "For this drollery his majestie gave him a hundred poundes."

Raph, I think, was more likely the dog. Blessings, anyway, on old friends and little girls in long dresses.

TV poor teaching medium

WINNIPEG (CP) — Television conveys emotional messages better than facts, and thus is a poor medium for teaching a subject such as mathematics, a Manitoba department of education consultant said Friday.

Speaking to a group of teachers, Pat Blackburn said that for reasons not yet understood focusing on one point encourages the viewer to think objectively and to analyse information. But peripheral vision enhances emotional or subjective messages.

Making a coldframe work better

jack beastall

A coldframe pays its rent only when it is in use, and for full use it must be in good condition.

Whether simple or elaborate in design there is always some sign of wear by the time fall arrives, and it is good business to make repairs and have the frame ready for immediate use.

Where plastic film is used for covering, the material should be checked to make sure it will withstand another winter. If there is any doubt it is better to replace it now than to have it tear open in bad weather.

Glass covers seem to suffer more during the summer months when they are not on the frames, excepting when a perfectly safe summer storage place is available. Even then there may be a few cracked glasses that have been forgotten.

In a reasonably fertile garden soil the wooden body of the frame will rot away at ground level after a few years. It pays to discover this condition before the frame is loaded with plants for the winter.

Another thing to check is small knotholes, large nail holes and cracks. Any of these can let a jet of cold air strike a plant, often causing damage that is difficult to diagnose.

When coldframes are needed for purposes requiring special soil mixtures, such as rooting hardwood cuttings or for winter and spring vegetables, it is easier to prepare these mixtures while the outside soil is reasonably dry.

Sawdust is a fine insulator against cold that works well around potted plants that require frame storage. There is less chance of plant losses due to the rootballs freezing and less splitting of damp clay pots in frosty weather.

Slug bait placed in a closed frame before it is filled with plants will destroy a lot of trouble-makers in a few nights. This precaution, coupled with careful checking of roots for pests and thorough washing of pots to remove eggs and disease spores before going into storage, will prevent a considerable amount of plant damage in the months ahead.

Mounting a coldframe on a raised bed of soil is worth consideration.

A dry soil can be readily warmed with the application of very little heat, whereas a wet soil will require many times that amount of heat to raise its temperature a fraction of a degree.

This is the basis for the statement that well-drained soil are "earlier" than poorly drained soils.

Any practice that will lessen the quantity of water in the soil will be of benefit to the home gardener using coldframes for growing plants during winter.

While coldframes may be artificially heated, in the true sense they depend on storing the small amount of heat supplied by the weak rays of the winter sun.

The drier the soil within the frame the deeper the warmth can penetrate, and this means a greater reserve to be slowly released during the hours without sunlight.

For winter growing of vegetables, or any other plants set directly into the soil within the frame, better results are obtained when the level of the soil is higher than that of the surrounding soil so that soil water just beneath the surface does not add greatly to the soil water in the frame.

As the average coldframe is too shallow to permit raising the soil within and still leave sufficient room beneath the covers for a reasonable amount of plant growth, it is better to prepare a raised bed and place the coldframe on top.

Only a few inches increase in height is needed to make an appreciable difference in drainage.

Too great an increase must be avoided because more frequent watering would be needed and this is not desirable when weather condition preclude free ventilation of the frame.

November and December are probably the two most difficult months for keeping stored plants and roots in good condition in a coldframe.

The relatively mild temperatures make free ventilation essential if fungous diseases are to be avoided, yet there must always be sufficient covering to keep out heavy rains which are common during those months.

It is under these conditions that the home gardener discovers that hinged coldframe covers are not so convenient as loose sliding covers. In fact, the only use I have found for hinges on covers is their ability to keep the covers over the frame when a high wind develops and there is nobody around to make them secure.

When the covers are loose they can be tilted to the left or right, back or front, to suit the direction of wind on clear days, or raised on 2-by-4 blocks to varying heights for good air circulation during rainy periods.

While this is the correct way to ventilate frames through the fall and in mild periods over winter and early spring, it does pose the problem of keeping the covers in place when winds become strong and gusty.

Heavy 10-foot planks are used on rows of commecial frames, but the short planks for the average home garden frame are not heavy enough to be effective.

Two light wires attached to screw eyes, hooks, or heavy nails driven into the wooden base of the frame, and carried over the covers, are more dependable when frequent checking is not possible.

One end of each wire is twisted loosely around the hook or nail to facilitate easy removal of the wires for attending the plants in the frame.

Plenty of air and a minimum of moisture are the requirements for the safe storage of roots and tubers in a coldframe during mild weather. Together with the frequent removal of decaying plant parts and the replenishment of the slug biat, these factors constitute the important part of coldframe operation.

Work for week

Zonal geraniums will need shelter now from excessive rain and frost. Give a light, cool but frost-free place if plants are wanted for either cuttings in spring or to grow again as large plants.

Lift gladiolus corms if not done. Store dry in cool airy place. Cut off stems at once. Burn leaves and stems if thrips were evident by streaking of the leaves.

Sow broad beans (a dwarf variety) and Early Laxton's Progress peas where sheltered from winter northeast wind. They should germinate and then spend winter making good root systems so that an early start is made as soon as a mild spell comes in later winter.

Gather filbert nuts after rain and light frosts have loosened stems. Dry shells in airy warm place quickly before nutmeat is spoiled.

Plant tubers of Anemone coronaria for worthwhile small investment. Glowing colors next spring and early summer are lovely in sunny, well-drained border.

Continue using late fall vegetables straight from garden — Fordhook spinach, Simpson Lettuce, parsnips, carrots, last of runner beans. Remove all squash from vines; don't risk another frost.

Bird suicides mystify experts

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — Indian scientists are mystified by mass suicides of birds in a small village in the far eastern state of Assam.

Birds commit suicide on rainy nights on the foothills of Barail Range, much to the delight of villagers who feast on them.

The birds, attracted by torch flames and other lights on the ground, swoop down on Jatinga village and make no attempt to fly away.

The 1,200 villagers consider their arrival a divine favor and roast them for dinner.

Two Calcutta scientists from the Zoological Survey of India studied the phenomenon for more than two weeks recently but failed to establish why the birds behaved so strangely. One of the scientists, Dr. Sudhin Sengupta, published his findings in Science Reporter magazine.

The village is the only one where the phenomenon has been observed.

Jatinga discovered its good fortune by accident in 1905 when a group of people left their homes in search of missing buffalo, Sengupta said.

They were carrying flaming torches and suddenly found birds falling around them. The villagers thought God had sent the birds to satisfy their hunger.

Since then, on windy, rainy nights the villagers go out with long bamboo sticks, light a torch and kill the birds.

Few birds are seen during daytime and they never come on rainless nights.

Sengupta visited Jatinga twice and spent a total of 18 nights in the village. Each night he observed the phenomenon for an hour at three to four different sites.

"The average number of kills per-site, per-hour was around 20 birds."

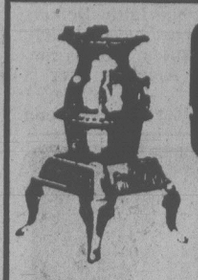

The birds he collected were of 18 different varieties including some which were migratory and not usually found in the region.

On one occasion, a yellow bittern and a three-toed kingfisher came to the balcony of the rest house he was staying in, drawn by an ordinary light bulb.

The birds made no atempt to escape, refused to eat snails and earthworms given to them and died within 48 hours.

Sengupta said there was no answer to why the birds moved towards the source of light or why it happened only in Jatinga.

In fact, the movement of birds from the sky to the source of light is confined only to a stretch of one kilometre between the Jatinga railway station and the local health centre.

Bible essay contest marks anniversary

In recognition of its 75th anniversary as a national society, the Canadian Bible Society is sponsoring an essay contest for British Columbians.

Essays on the subject What the Bible Means to Me will encourage young people to take a more serious interest in the place and meaning of the Bible today.

Essays will be judged by Rev. Alistair McLeod, past chairman United Church Conference of B.C., Judge John Spencer, chancellor of the Anglican diocese of New Westminster and Sister Mary Adele, co-ordinator of Religious Education, archdiocese of Vancouver.

Details of the essay contest may be obtained from the Rev. David H. Cole, Canadian Bible Society, 593 Richards Street, Vancouver. Closing date for submission of essays is Oct. 31.

Perspectives

By J.A. DAVIDSON

Here are a couple of sentences from a letter I received recently: "I really have to accept part of the reincarnationist theory now. How come the organized church has dumped this part of Christianity?"

I can understand the appeal that the notion of reincarnation is having for many people today as they search for meaning in life and encounter teachings from oriental religions, particularly some forms of Hinduism; and from spiritualism and theosophy, which have been active movements in our society for many years.

But I must point out right at the beginning that the Church never had the notion of reincarnation in its baggage, and so could not have dumped it.

The word "incarnation" means, literally, "enfleshment."

In Christian theology it is used to designate the belief that God expressed himself in a unique way in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.

"Reincarnation," then, designates "re-enfleshment"—the assumption that the existence of a soul not essentially tied to the physical body and that at physical death the soul passes into another living creature, a human, an animal, even a plant. (Reincarnation is also called "metempsychosis" and "trans- migration of the soul".)

Belief in reincarnation has its roots in remotest antiquity. It was found in some oriental religions, and in ancient Greece the philosophers Plato and Pythagoras championed it. Among the modern philosophers, David Hume and Arthur Schopenhauer took the belief seriously without necessarily embracing it.

The belief probably came out of attempts to explain evil and find a way through it. Its attraction seems to lie partly in its claim to provide a morally satisfying explanation of the inequities and inequalities of fortune and character among persons, which it attributes to deeds done in a former life.

It comes in part from an intuition that justice must ultimately prevail through souls migrating from one creature to another until complete purification has been achieved. It is understandable why many people find it a comforting belief.

But the notion of reincarnation is not expressed in any form in either the Old Testament or the New. In biblical thought a person is a psychophysical unity, not an animated body: this is consonant with the current notion of the "psychosomatic," the essential unity of the person who is both "soma" (body) and "psyche" (soul, including mind). The notion of a migrating soul is utterly inconsistent with the biblical understanding of human nature.

In the ancient Church, St. Augustine attacked the notion of reincarnation as being contradictory of Christian belief, and it is quite irreconcilable with Christian theology as understood in any of the major branches of the Church today.

And, from the scientific side, here are two questions which should be asked of reincarnation. 1. Can the notion be reconciled with the psychological principle that memory is an essential dimension of personal identity? 2. How can we relate it to what geneticists have learned about human heredity? I am incapable of adequately answering those questions—but I think that any answers should be examined very carefully.

(Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Church chronicles

The Canadian Bible Society's 75th anniversary banquet starts at 6:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 27, at the Empress. Guest speaker will be Rev. Terry Winter. Tickets, $10, are available, among other places at First United Church office, Quadra at Balmoral.

The Retired Anglican Clergy Fellowship (RACF) meets for a service of Holy Communion at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 26, in St. Matthais Church.

Clergy wives and clergy widows are welcome at the service, which will be followed by a brown bag lunch in the parish hall. Tea and coffee will be provided.

Rev. Rollo Boas will speak on retired clergy within the world of seniors.

Evangelist Sam Jenkins is coming to the Victoria area.

He is known for his warm and friendly, yet straightforward "tell it like it is" preaching. For 18 years he has travelled across Canada, the U.S. and England as a full-time evangelist with the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada.

Jenkins has had an exciting life. He was once a fighter managed by Tommy Burns, former heavyweight champion of the world. Also for 17 years he was a full-time labor leader in Vancouver. Now, after being a confirmed agnostic, he is an evangelist, country singer, composer, and writer.

Hear him Oct. 23-26, 7:30 p.m. nightly and Sunday, Oct. 28, 11 a.m. and 6 p.m. at Oldfield Road Gospel Chapel, at the corner of Oldfield, Old West Saanich and Sparton roads.

A special alcohol awareness week will be held from Sunday through Oct. 28 to emphasize the problem and to indicate the nature of the cure of the alcoholic and where treatment may be obtained.

The matter will be focus of a service at 11 a.m. Sunday at Trinity Presbyterian Church. Rev. Nolan Gingrich, chaplain to Gillian Manor in Sidney, one of Canada's most advanced treatment centres, will be special preacher and he will be assisted by Charles Fitt, a staff counsellor at the centre.

The Royal Canadian College of Organists is sponsoring a choir festival Saturday, Oct. 27, at First United Church, Quadra at Balmoral, at 7:30 p.m. There will be 150 to 200 voices, a brass ensemble, percussion and organ.

Kelly and one of his 'friends'

Puppets bring the holy word

David Kelly and his "dummy" and puppet friends will be in Victoria this week at Central Baptist Church.

David is a children's worker with the Scripture Union, and uses his talent to share the reality of the Christian gospel with children. There will be puppets, stories, songs, contests, and filmstrips.

The program runs Monday to Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the church auditorium. Friday night is parents' night, beginning at 7 p.m. Children in Grades 1 to 6 are especially invited to come each night.

Pulpit switch for aid

On Sunday, Oct. 28, and Nov. 4, there will be a pulpit exchange of the United Church ministers in the Victoria Presbytery.

The purpose of this exchange is to promote Opportunity Now, a stewardship program designed to challenge United churches across Canada to set a new base for mission work in the 1980s.

Stewardship is the total commitment of life to Jesus Christ, sharing with others faith in God—time, treasures and talents. If people are committed and informed about the mission of the church locally, nationally and around the world they will respond.

In response to the plight of the boat people the United Church of Canada through local congregations and in consultation with federal and provincial governments is working in the resettlement of refugees.

Through contributions to the World Development Service and Relief Fund supplies and medical aid are able to move quickly into disaster areas.

Because of the squeeze of inflation many worthwhile programs will have to be curtailed. Now is the opportunity to reach out in greater commitment and loving care. Victoria United Church presbytery through this pulpit exchange will be telling the story of the work of missions at home and around the world.

The first Synod of the continuing Anglican Church of Canada, known as The Anglican Catholic Church of Canada, was held at Winnipeg in the Church of St. Jean Brebeuf on September 22, 1979. Father Carmino deCatanzaro of Ottawa, Bishop-Elect, presided. Representatives attended from parishes in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

By resolution the Anglican Catholic Church of Canada was established as an independent jurisdiction which, although not part of the continuing Anglican Church in the United States (the continuing Episcopal Church), is in full communion with all parts of the same, as with all faithful Anglicans throughout the World who continue in Catholic Faith, Order and Discipline. Regretably, this has been abandoned by the Anglican Church of Canada and the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States.

The Synod adopted the Declaration of Utrecht, requesting the Old Catholics, through the Polish National Catholic Church, to restore to the Anglican Catholic Church of Canada the relationship of full communion which the Old Catholics continue to retain with the Church of England, but discontinued with both the Anglican Church of Canada and the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States when those two bodies unilaterally adopted the ordination of women to the priesthood, and other acts contrary to Catholic Faith and Order.

Before the judge

A 30-year-old man who told Judge Harold Alder in provincial court Friday he was starving on $240 a month was jailed for 18 months.

Charles Stuart McLetchie, who moved to Victoria recently from Campbell River, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering and possession of stolen property.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith said McLetchie broke into the home of a slight acquaintance at 60 Durrance Road on Oct. 14, getting in through an unlocked front room window. McLetchie stayed a few days and made arrangements during that time to sell some pieces of furniture to the Sidney Bargain House, 2372 Beacon. The sale was to have taken place Thursday, Smith added.

Saanich police arrived Thursday morning to investigate and found that McLetchie had emptied contents of drawers and had a stereo unit boxed and ready to move.

McLetchie admitted to officers he emptied the drawers to make the furniture lighter to carry out. Value of the furniture due to be sold was more than $1,800.

Police also learned that a microwave oven valued at more than $200 was sold to Universal Trading Centre, 584 Johnson, for $110 on Tuesday.

Duty legal aid lawyer Barry Mah Ming told the court McLetchie was involved in a car mishap two or three months earlier which resulted in some brain damage and loss of vision, leaving him almost totally blind.

In asking for probation rather than a jail term, Mah Ming also said McLetchie was denied help from the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and provincial welfare agencies.

However, Alder disagreed with Mah Ming's suggestion, which was supported by Smith. The judge noted the offence carried a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and, while he could sympathize with McLetchie, the public must be protected.

He also imposed a two-year probation period to follow the prison term.

Judge Fred Green sentenced a 21-year-old man to 45 days in prison for theft from his employer.

Terrance Joseph Marra, 1631 McKenzie, pleaded guilty Sept. 14 to theft over $200 and was remanded until Friday for a pre-sentence report.

Court was told Marra was employed in the sporting goods section of Woolworths and was put under surveillance by security staff July 9. An undercover security officer purchased a fishing rod for about $32 and some assorted fishing equipment for another $3.61. The surveillance team saw Marra ring up the $3.61 sale and also saw him take another $100 from the till the same day.

Marra told police he used the money to pay debts, buy groceries, and purchase golf clubs and liquor.

Green also placed Marra on a year's probation.

Two drinking drivers and one who drove while under suspension were sent to jail.

James Peter Olson, 59, of Honeymoon Bay, was given 14 days and Frederick Anthony Suffern, 34, of 3626 Tillicum, received seven days.

Johannes Vermaning, 23, of 140 Wellington, was sentenced to seven days after pleading guilty to driving while suspended.

Fined for drinking-driving were: James Harris, 19, of HMCS Kootenay, $500; and Herbert Wright, 43, of 921 Skogstad, $400.

TV link pushed

Transport and Communications Minister Alex Fraser has opposed a federal proposal which might delay television distribution by satellite for another year.

A statement released by his office in Victoria said the minister voiced his objection at a national meeting of communications ministers in Toronto, where he urged the federal government to decide the issue as quickly as possible in order to make TV available to remote areas.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission is to be asked to consider pay TV and the use of satellites for transmitting signals to distant reception areas.

Using satellites is the natural means of correcting the imbalance between urban and rural television, Fraser said.

"What we need now is action, not another round of theorizing."

He also wants provincial authority in satellite and cable TV.

Captain D.R. Thompson and the 29-year-old Resurgent

Ship here on last trip

By PAT DUFOUR

An aging sea-borne workhorse, the Resurgent, lies alongside the fuelling jetty of CFB Esquimalt's Colwood base.

One of the 32 ships in Britain's Royal Fleet Auxiliary, she is on her last voyage. When she returns to Britain Dec. 17 she will be put into reserve.

Now almost 29 years old, the Resurgent has steamed roughly just over 1 million miles during her sea-going career which began as a cargo passenger liner for the China coast trade in 1951. Then she was named Changchow III.

She received her present name in April, 1953, and converted to a fast replenishment ship in July, 1958.

FRA ships are owned and operated by Britain's defence department but manned by merchant navy officers and men.

Captain D.R. Thompson, master of the Resurgent, says until about a year ago the Royal Navy was the only navy in the world which used merchant marine-manned ships to fuel and supply stores, ammunition and provisions to its fleets in various parts of the world.

The RFA was formed in 1911 and now has a variety of vessels ranging from tankers to ships that can beach and unload tankers and others that are used to train helicopter personnel.

Resurgent left the Rosyth naval dockyard on Aug. 18, her first ports of call being in Bermuda and Florida. The next was in California to unload supplies for the Royal Air Force contingent in the Nevada base of Nelles.

The last call before reaching Victoria was at Prince Rupert where the Resurgent unloaded special supplies to be used at the British army's tank-training unit in Suffield, Alta.

She leaves here Monday to go to Indian Island, southeast of Port Townsend, to take on special supplies for the Royal Navy.

Thompson joined the RFA as a third officer in 1954 and his first command in 1968 was the stores carrier Bacchus. He's commanded a variety of vessels in the past 11 years, receiving command of the Resurgent in January this year.

He commands a crew of 132 and says he and the others who serve in the vast RFA are drawn to it because of the challenges not found in a conventional merchant ship. These include such manoeuvres as steaming on station at close quarters during naval exercises and onboard landings of helicopters.

Flight cut protest

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A move by Pacific Western Airlines to cancel its early-morning Vancouver-to-Kamloops flight has prompted objections by the chamber of commerce here.

The chamber voted Thursday to send a letter to the airline following the airline's decision to cancel the flight Tuesday.

Jack Cooke, PWA vice-president, said the flight was cancelled because the airplanes are needed for a new Vancouver-Prince George-Dawson Creek flight.

Neil MacDonald, a chamber member who investigated the situation, said PWA dropped the Kamloops stop because it is trying to compete with CP Air's increased service to Prince George.

"It's important to realize that it was PWA's decision to switch flights, not any licencing body," said MacDonald.

MacDonald said the cancellation will hamper Vancouver businessmen who used arrive in Kamloops early for a full day of business and then return to Vancouver at the end of the day.

Prospectors slam curbs

Premier Bill Bennett faces tough opposition from the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines if he follows through with his suggestion that ranches and some rangelands be made off limits to prospectors.

Manager Rick Higgs said Thursday further exemptions are totally unnecessary.

He said he hopes that before changes are considered the government will consult the chamber.

"We'll certainly be interested in discussing it and we'll willingly give all the information we have," he said.

Higgs said he would invite the B.C. Cattlemen's Association to any such discussions.

Higgs said the chamber has an excellent working relationship with the cattlemen, and he is confident they would back up the miners in telling the government no new laws are necessary.

At a press conference earlier in the week, the premier talked about the uranium exloration on the Bennett family ranch in the Okanagan, noting that under the Mineral Act, such activity cannot be prevented.

He then said he is considering protection for lands such as ranches and leased rangelands that are not now exempted under the act.

"It is something we'll be considering as government between now and the next session."

Properties with dwellings on them, orchards, and farms under cultivation are already exempted from mineral exploration.

Higgs said legislative changes were considered 10 years ago.

But all problems were worked out through discussions without the need for legislation.

He said the cattlemen agree the safeguards already in place are adequate.

Before entering a property, prospectors and mining companies must post a bond and after exploration, must restore the land to its natural state and make compensation for damages.

Ranches and the range leases comprise vast tracts of land in the province, and must be left available for mineral exploration, Higgs said.

Bennett said he recognizes the ranchers' problems are not with the exploration companies. But their activity on a property attracts other people who are less responsible.

When recreational vehicle operators see exploration vehicles on a property, they feel they are free to enter the same land. But the damage they do is not compensated by anyone unless they're caught.

Bennett said ranchers often find fences torn down and cattle have escaped.

Not only do the ranchers have to repair the damage, but it often takes two or three days to round up the stock.

It is because of this he is considering further protection for the ranchers.

Higgs, who has been with the chamber for 10 years, says Bennett is using spurious reasoning.

"It's an unfair approach to blame people who are clearly not to blame, hoping that as if by magic, it will prevent a larger third group from entering the land.

Higgs says it's always easy to pick on small groups.

And he rejects out of hand the position that would place prospectors, who are courteous and compelled by law to care for the property they are working on, to be placed under further burdens.

The issue has come forward from time to time in the past, Higgs said.

But at present there is no clamor from the ranchers, there are no unsettled disputes between miners and ranchers, and there are no cases before the courts.

"If there were cases that exhibited weaknesses in the law, then fair enough."

There is absolutely no justification in further encumbering the 9,000 prospectors and 500 corporations "out there finding minerals for the benefit of all the people in the province," Higgs said.

AMS carries on lease fight

The University of Victoria Alma Mater Society will continue its opposition to the provincial government's Discovery Parks program which involves the leasing of land near universities to major corporations for research and development.

A meeting will be held at the Student Union Building theatre Monday at 12:30 p.m. to discuss the issue.

UVic president Dr. Howard Petch and B.C. Development Corp. official Don Larsen will speak on the specifics of UVic's proposed park.

Terry Johnson, UVic external vice-president, said the Discovery Park concept erodes the traditional independence of universities.

It was biased toward the applied sciences rather than pure research, he said.

"The Discovery Park project comes at a time when all groups connected with education in the province are protesting the failure of the government to adequately fund post-secondary education," he said.

The AMS claims the $3 million grant for the project was sneaked through the legislature under a miscellaneous appropriations bill.

Computers catching up in tree count

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — With hundreds of millions of trees covering the province, it's easy to see why British Columbia forestry officials are as much as 25 years behind in counting.

But now harried personnel are getting help — from a computer system that is the envy of a number of countries.

Tom Waterland, lands and forests minister, says the system will permit a complete cataloguing of the billions of board feet within the next two years.

The former system was so far behind that some areas haven't been assessed in 25 years, Waterland said in an interview Friday. And officials consider themselves caught up if they update figures every 10 years.

The new system, which he says is the best in the world today, was designed in B.C. and has attracted forestry industry officials from both the United States and Scandanavian countries.

Every area that's logged will be plugged into the computer system, Waterland said, adding that once officials are caught up, they can update figures on a progressive basis.

Cataloguing inventories not only allows the government to assess reserves, but also to find which companies are undercutting or overcutting in their licenced tree farms, major considerations in conserving and maintaining healthy forests.

Waterland said close attention is being paid to large companies that don't abide by forestry guidelines. Large companies logging in southwestern B.C. and on Vancouver Island consistently undercut their areas.

"It's going to be a case of use it properly or lose it (tree licences)."

Victoria also is trying to encourage companies to make better use of the forests through reforestation, better utilization of cut timber and greater use of "weed wood" trees such as alder, birch and ashwood, he said.

Teachers out: parents

SURREY (CP) — Parents of mentally retarded children attending Simon Cunningham school have called for the resignation of two teachers who withheld lunches from students as a form of behavior modification.

Bev Zakevicius, who has a 17-year-old son at the school, said letters asking for the resignation of teachers Bev Mason and Mamie Wong have been sent to school principal Pat Keary, Surrey school superintendent Jack Evans, Education Minister Pat McGeer and Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

"We as taxpayers want these people out of our schools," Zakevicius said.

"If we sit back and don't take any action we'll just look like dumbbells. We find it will be hard to trust these teachers now."

Evans and Mason had defended the practice as a proven method of behavior modfication and a way to get students to do their work. They denied that the 11 retarded children at the school were being starved or subjected to cruel or unusual punishment.

However, Evans bowed to parental pressure at a special meeting Wednesday and said the practice will be stopped immediately.

The matter was raised at a school board meeting earlier this week when the sister of an 18-year-old female student demanded to know why the girl was returning home with parts of her lunch not eaten.

An era ends as Wardair stops northern runs

EDMONTON (CP) — Wardair Canada Ltd. plans to pull out of Yellowknife and the Northwest Territories and bring to an end a 33-year bush-flying presence in northern Canada.

President Max Ward said Friday the Edmonton-based company "can no longer economically support" its northern operation, will close its Yellowknife base and sell more than $14 million worth of aircraft and other assets.

The demand for bush flying services has decreased in the last few years and Wardair doesn't foresee demand increasing during the next few years, Ward said in an interview. He began his aviation career as a bush pilot in the Yellowknife area in 1946.

He said activity in the North has dwindled with the death of the Mackenzie Valley natural gas pipeline, proposals for an Alaska Highway oil pipeline scuttled and plans for an Alaska Highway gas pipeline stalled.

Oil companies, which once used to lease aircraft for as long as two years, now meet their own aircraft needs in the North. Spending by the territorial government is down.

Mining exploration has increased but at best yields a seasonal demand restricted to two or three summer months.

Wardair operated five 19-passenger de Havilland Twin Otters, one 50-passenger de Havilland Dash 7 and one 18-passenger Grumman G1 out of Yellowknife.

Ward said some of the 37 people working in the northern operation will be offered transfers to Wardair's international operations but "others just won't leave the North."

Ward said he doubts Wardair will re-enter the northern market even if activity picks up again. He said the area is better served by the small, aggressive, independent owner-operator.

Ward said he may have kept the northern operation going too long because of "emotional ties."

"We were getting no return on investment and there was no improvement on the horizon." He said the company now can better concentrate on making its principal operations — international charters — profitable. Wardair's charter operations lost more than $5 million in the first half of 1979.

Wardair had its beginnings in Yellowknife in 1946 when Ward founded Polaris Air Services Ltd. with $2,000 and a financed de Havilland Fox Moth that Ward used to ferry miners, prospectors, trappers and freight throughout the North.

Polaris became Wardair Canada Ltd. in 1951 and 10 years later the airline acquired its international charter licence.

Brink's driver charged in two more plots

MONTREAL (CP) — The driver of a Brink's armored truck which was hijacked and robbed of $2.8 million in 1976 has been charged along with another Brink's employee with plotting two similar heists the year before.

Gilles Lachapelle, who was kidnapped at gunpoint in the 1976 robbery, and Ronald Brunet pleaded not guilty to conspiracy charges in Sessions court Thursday.

One of the alleged conspiracies involved holding up a Brink's truck at a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada in Montreal's financial district in 1975, while the other was to have taken place outside an east-end supermarket owned by a Montreal consumers co-operative.

At the prosecution's request, the two men were denied bail on the grounds that their lives may be in danger.

By a court order, the men will be tried by judge and jury and without a preliminary hearing.

The 1976 robbery, the largest cash theft in North American history, was exected in broad daylight in city's financial district with an anti-aircraft weapon mounted in a stolen truck.

Testimony during subsequent court proceedings showed that Lachapelle was taken — along with his truck — to suburban Nuns Island, roughed up and handcuffed to the seat. He later managed to free himself and fled to a nearby tennis club.

About $80,000 of the $2.8 million stolen was recovered and three men were charged in the case: Rejean Duff, Michel Pilon and Roger Provencal.

Duff was discharged during a preliminary hearing for lack of evidence, then disappeared, causing the other two to be discharged for lack of witnesses.

Hondas up to snuff

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian Honda Motor Ltd. issued a statement Friday replying to allegations by the Automobile Protection Association that Honda cars are unsafe.

Masayoshi Tsukamoto, president of Canadian Honda, took issue with association president Phil Edmonston who said the cars are full of mechanical defects and that the company has refused to do free repairs on the vehicles.

Tsukamoto said Honda cars are manufactured "to existing standards which are designed to provide safety, durability and economy and which meet or exceed all requirements of the Canadian Motor Vehicle Safety Act."

"The company also feels that the great public acceptance of its automobiles, which has made it the No. 1 import in Canada, is additional proof of their safety, reliability and economy."

He said Honda has "pledged to continue its utmost efforts to provide safe, reliable vehicles, proper service and customer satisfaction."

Edmonston told a news conference in Montreal this week that his consumer association found evidence in internal Honda documents of a large number of unreported defects, as well as failure to inform owners that the company has a policy of doing certain repair and replacement work free.

He said some of the defects could endanger lives and cited brake deficiencies, loss of steering control, sudden stops and accelerations, engines that catch fire, cracks in the front axle and defective tires and lights.

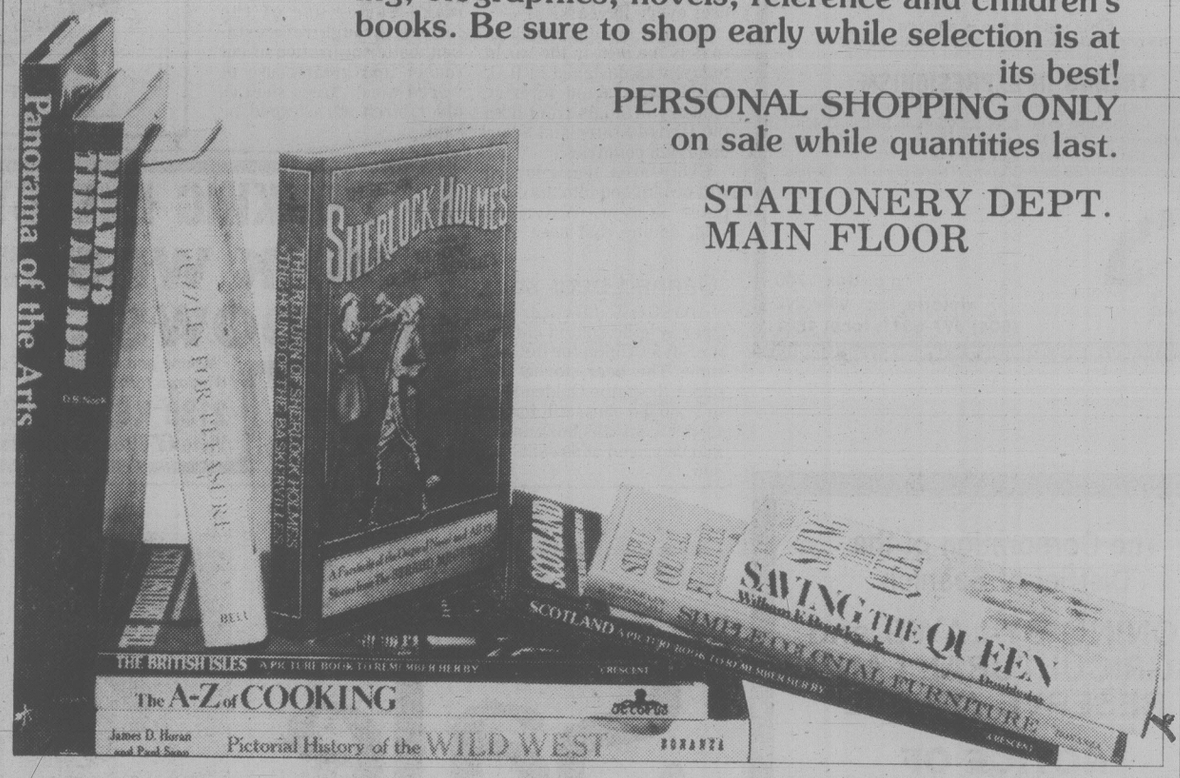

A spokesman for the federal transport department said there was nothing in the association documents that indicate Hondas are unsafe. He said federal standards exist for all automobile parts and that all Honda models have passed their once-a-year departmental inspection.

Charges dropped in Giguere case

MONTREAL (CP) — The last of the charges in Quebec against Liberal Senator Louis Giguere concerning the Sky Shops affair was dropped Friday, says Giguere's lawyer Bruno Pateras.

The charge that was dropped was one of accepting $95,000 in exchange for the use of political influence in obtaining an extension of the lease on the Sky Shops duty-free store at Montreal's Dorval Airport.

Giguere faces similar charges in Ontario but the case was halted last year after his trial in Montreal began.

The senator, a Liberal party organizer and fundraiser, was one of former prime minister Trudeau's first appointments to the Senate in 1968.

Chief Justice Yves Mayrand of sessions court ruled that the charge should be dropped after the Crown moved to withdraw it, said Pateras.

Chief Justice Mayrand also dropped similar charges last week against Clarence Campbell, former president of the National Hockey League, and Gordon Brown, a businessman based in the Bahamas.

The judge said he dropped the charges because of "intolerable" delaying tactics by Crown and defence lawyers.

The three, along with Montreal businessman Louis Lapointe, had been facing the charges since 1976. Lapointe died two weeks before his trial was to begin.

In his earlier ruling on the influence-peddling charges against Brown and Campbell, Chief Justice Mayrand said they were "liberated but not acquitted." He noted that the charges could be reinstated by the Crown at a later date.

The charges said that Campbell, Brown and Lapointe gave a $95,000 bribe to Giguere in exchange for his help in arranging the lease extension.

The judge said that delaying tactics by both Crown and defence lawyers had led to the defendants' preliminary hearing being postponed 32 times "without the case moving an inch."

At the hearing Friday, Crown prosecutor Guy Dupre told the court that it was not fair to say the case had been delayed 32 times.

Dupre said that an agreement had been reached between lawyers for the three and the former Crown prosecutor, Joseph Tarasofsky, who left the case when he was appointed as a judge.

The agreement specified that hearings on the substantive charges would follow hearings on related conspiracy charges, Dupre said. At least 15 postponements were the result of this agreement, he added.

Giguere was acquitted of the conspiracy charge in June, 1978, after a three-week trial. The Crown is appealing the acquittal.

Campbell and Brown still are awaiting trial on the conspiracy charges.

They are awaiting the outcome of a move to have Campbell's committal to trial quashed.

The case against Campbell and Brown was separated from that of Giguere to allow them an English-language trial. Giguere was tried in French.

After the charge was dropped Friday, Giguere said in a telephone interview from his Montreal home that "it's been going on so long that it's about time the charge was withdrawn.

"We were in and out of court for so long, and each time costs. Over the years, it cost me thousands of dollars."

The Sky Shops affair began nearly four years ago when Elmer MacKay — now minister responsible for regional economic expansion but then a Conservative opposition MP — said in the Commons that Giguere had been involved in a possible conflict of interest in 1971-72.

MacKay called for a judicial inquiry after tabling a public petition in the Commons that said the senator made a $95,000 profit through the purchase and resale of 5,000 shares in Sky Shops Export Ltd., which ran the duty-free shop.

The charges were originally to have been laid in Quebec, but because of what one Crown prosecutor called at the time "a pure conflict of philosophy" with the Crown prosecutor's office in Quebec, the RCMP laid conspiracy charges in Ontario.

Quebec decided to go ahead anyway with the charges.

Northern rail faces inquiry

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian transport commission Friday ordered an inquiry into the White Pass and Yukon Railway which says its service in the territory may have to be interrupted because of financial difficulties.

Northern Affairs Minister Jake Epp asked for the inquiry after Federal Industries Ltd., owners of the White Pass, requested heavy financial aid to keep the railway running.

Epp told the commission he believes the railway has an obligation to provide uninterrupted rail service and that company statements make this doubtful without federal aid.

Acting on Epp's request, the commission has appointed Keith Thompson senior counsel to its railway transport commissvon, and Edward Weinberg, director of freight studies of its research branch, to make the inquiry.

They are to assess the company's performance along with those of other surface transportation services in the territory "and seek the reasons why the companies providing rail service in the Yukon find themselves in their present circumstances."

They are to suggest any possible short-or long-term measures available under the National Transportation Policy to assist the railway company.

The two men also are asked to predict the probable social and commercial effect on life in the Yukon that would result from loss of the rail service.

The commission said the inquiry is an urgent one and that the two men should file their report to the commission as soon as possible.

Dress rule has MP fit to be tied

Allmand's tie solves knotty problem

OTTAWA (CP) — Liberal MP Warren Allmand, after draping a tie around his turtle-neck sweater, protested Friday that parliamentary rules requiring him to wear a tie in the Commons are anachronistic and sexually discriminatory.

"This is a House of Commons . . . of commoners," the former Liberal cabinet minister told the Speaker amid titters and hoots from MPs of all parties. "The common dress in Canada is not the wearing of a tie."

Pointing to External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald and other women MPs, Allmand noted that they were not wearing ties and "I think we should have the same freedom."

Allmand told reporters that he had been in a hurry and lacked time to put on a shirt and tie before the daily question period began.

When he entered the Commons, some MPs passed notes to Speaker James Jerome complaining about the tieless politician. Allmand said the Speaker did not permit him to ask questions of Tory ministers because of his tieless state.

So Allmand temporarily left the chamber and borrowed a tie from the neck of New Democratic Party MP Peter Ittinuar, an Inuit from the Northwest Territories riding of Nunatsiaq.

Herb Gray (L — Windsor West) commented: "I think the way Warren was dressed was in good taste."

The dress regulations are outdated, Gray said. For instance, MPs are allowed to wear hats and swords in the Commons, if they so chose, because of century-old traditions inherited from Great Britain.

Pointing to Svend Robinson (NDP — Burnaby), Gray said: "They (NDP MPs) are going to come in wearing cloth caps to represent the workers."

Jim Fulton (NDP — Skeena) had a novel solution to Allmand's problem.

"Wear a dress Warren, wear a dress."

Clark supports interest hikes

OTTAWA (UPC) — The federal government would likely support the governor of the Bank of Canada in still another increase in the record interest rate level in order to keep foreign capital in Canada, Prime Minister Joe Clark said.

Clark said Friday his government was trying to gain confidence with the financial community and that leads him to "agree with the judgment of the governor of the Bank of Canada regarding interest rates now."

Governor Gerald Bouey raised the bank rate to a record 13 per cent this month. Bouey said the higher rate was necessary to keep foreign money flowing into Canada.

"I imagine it would be the position of the government to support such a position," Clark told his weekly news conference when asked if he would agree to further increases.

"But, we would have to fully study all the circumstances at hand before we would be able to make such a decision.

"In the past we have found Mr. Bouey had his reasons for the recommendations he made . . . and we have accepted them. I would imagine that the same process probably would continue in the future."

Clark's position drew criticism from veteran New Democratic MP Stanley Knowles, who asked the government to deal with "this enemy number one" — a term Clark has used to describe inflation.

Figures released Thursday showed the annual inflation rate in September had risen to 9.6 per cent. Knowles asked Clark what Parliament can do "to persuade the government to reverse this idiotic policy of interest rate increases?"

Madam Contessa doesn't seem the retiring type

TORONTO (CP) — A 64-year-old woman who ran what a Crown attorney described as a different and sophisticated call-girl ring was fined $2,500 in county court Friday after pleading guilty to five charges of living off the avails of prostitution.

Elizabeth Spedding, known as the Contessa, has a criminal record dating back 47 years in Canada and the United States, including a U.S. conviction for trafficking in white slaves, said Crown Attorney Paul Culver.

Culver said that the last time Spedding was in court, less than two years ago, she carried a telephone beeper to carry on her business during the trial.

Once during the trial the beeper went off, and during the recess police saw her using pay telephones in the hall, Culver said.

Culver said that the women working for Spedding included housewives, teachers and nurses. Outside the courtroom, he said the women were recruited in singles bars and that a woman lawyer worked for Spedding.

Spedding will be 65 in two months and eligible for her old age pension, said her lawyer, Colin Campbell.

Judge William Rogers said: "If I may call you madam, I would say to you that for a retirement gift a fine may be appropriate."

She was fined $500 on each count.

Culver said that police learned through wiretaps that men would call Spedding at various numbers and tell her what they wanted. She would then send women to apartments and hotels.

The women charged between $150 and $300 an hour and would return 30 per cent to Spedding.

"She in effect charged a finder's fee," Campbell said. "The system relied on the honor system. She did not set a fee. She relied on the women to come back to her and report the transaction."

Ottawa to resume talks in radio ops strike

TORONTO (CP) — The strike by 1,167 radio operators at airports and coast guard stations across Canada will be brought to negotiation as soon as the treasury board agrees to a date, says Arthur Curtis, Ontario regional chairman for the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

"We're willing to go back to the bargaining table anytime," Curtis said in a telephone interview Friday, adding that the Public Service Staff Relations Board has appointed a mediator for the dispute that escalated into a strike Tuesday.

A treasury board spokesman said Wednesday the federal agency has agreed to a request from the Public Service Staff Relations Board to resume negotiations.

Curtis said negotiations will not be affected by charges filed by the alliance before the Public Service Staff Relations Board because of lockouts at Toronto and across the country, following work slowdowns by operators earlier this month.

"Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act it is legal to have a work slowdown," said Curtis. "We tried to have all employees just work in essential services. The employer locked us out."

Designated union members are performing essential services but will not make routine adjustments to equipment. Union officials said a management official who mistakenly shut down equipment Wednesday while attempting adjustments created a dangerous situation at Toronto International Airport by forcing the pilots of at least four planes to abort their landings.

The operators want a 15-per-cent increase over two years and in September they rejected a conciliation report that would have given them an eight-per-cent increase.

Operators, who earn between $13,328 and $15,500 a year, are responsible for providing navigational help, weather information and flight planning services at airports.

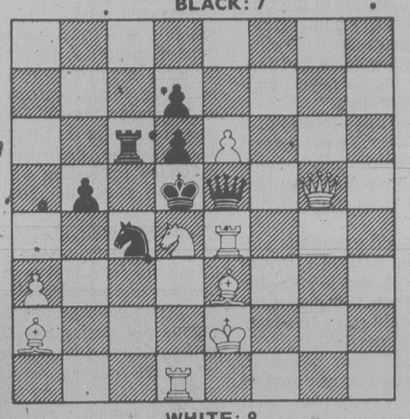

Oil waste attacked

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Conventional methods of oil recovery leave almost two-thirds of the oil in the ground, says Lyle Reed, a U.S. energy department official. By igniting part of the unrecovered oil to produce heat, or by injecting chemical polymers, carbon dioxide or steam, five to 10 per cent of the oil can be loosened and made to move to the production well, Reed says. The technique could increase U.S. production by 300,000 to 700,000 barrels a day by 1985.

A POSTAL BRILLIANCY

Postal chess can provide extended excitement, as is demonstrated by this brilliancy played across the Iron Curtain late in 1978 and early in 1979.

WHITE: Hans Bauermann, West Germany
BLACK: Karl Butze, East Germany

1. P-Q4	P-Q4

Landmark elections in '72, '79

By AL FORREST

The B.C. elections of 1972 and 1979 were landmark events, a University of Victoria conference was told Friday night.

The NDP victory in 1972 ended the 40-year-old concept of the permanent exclusion of the left from power in this province, said Alan Cairns, chairman of the University of B.C.'s political science department.

"The unthinkable had happened. It was a psychological breakthrough."

University of Victoria professor Walter Young agreed but said history might show the election on May 10 of this year was even more signficant.

"You could argue the victory by the NDP in 1972 was an accident. But in 1979, for the first time, it was evident the left could come to power on its own merits."

The NDP won power in 1972 with only 39 per cent of the vote but in the provincial election of 1979 it got 46 per cent, its highest ever.

Cairns and Young were addressing the first-ever B.C. studies conference, focussing on the history of this province.

Conference organizer UVic history professor Alan Artibise, surprised by a turnout of 200 delegates, twice the expected number, announced it will become a regular event alternating between Victoria and Simon Fraser University.

Conferences will be every two years, making the next one at SFU in 1981 and then back to UVic in 1983.

"We had no idea the conference would be as successful as this."

Friday night's seminar on B.C. politics drew a large turnout to the McLaurin building.

Cairns, who was chairman of the evening events, commented: "I hope this turnout tells us something about the excitement of this project and not about a typical Friday night in Victoria."

Cairns introduced Young and four other UVic professors who are engaged in a study of B.C. politics from 1970 to 1977 on a federal grant.

The study is to be completed and published by 1983.

The other UVic professors in the project are Norman Ruff, Neil Swainson, J.T. Morley and R.J. Wilson.

Ruff said his preliminary research so far has shown the 1970s ended the era of isolation for B.C. Before this decade, it was a standing order that whenever a premier got into trouble he attacked Ottawa. There was little of this in the 1970s. Any criticism of Ottawa was on points of principle.

The 1970s ushered in a period of closer co-operation with western provinces, especially with Alberta.

Swainson, who is studying the role of Crown corporations in the 1970s, said there is increasing public pressure to bring these operations under closer control. Crown corporations in B.C. employ 22,000 people, have annual revenues exceeding $2 billion and assets of about $8 billion.

Morley is studying the role of pressure groups on governments. He said it appears lawyers had easier access to the NDP government than unions did during the 1972-1975 period and he was analysing the reasons.

Wilson said a study of the pre-1972 period shows that Premier W.A.C. Bennett believed talk and action were incompatible. He had the legislature in session only three months a year, making it difficult for the voice of the opposition to be heard.

One result was that, when the NDP came to power in 1972, it placed a high priority on the reform of the legislature, giving the opposition a stronger voice. But it did little to streamline operations to make government work better.

This was because it still approached the legislture from the point of view of the opposition long after it had formed the government, almost as if it couldn't believe it had achieved power.

The reforms proved costly to the NDP because they gave Social Credit a strong hand to attack the government and win in 1975.

In summing up the discussion, Cairns said the comments of the five UVic professors had been worthwhile, although there was a tendency to view the decade as having been only three years long. He was referring to the 1972-75 years when the NDP was in power.

Island paper wins award

DUNCAN — The Lake News, published by Gerry and Vera Soroka of Lake Cowichan, has been named the best provincial publication in its category by the B.C. and Yukon Community Newspaper Association.

This is the second time the paper has won an award. The Canadian Newspaper Association awarded it third place for an issue published by previous owners Tony and Liz Kant.

Ex-school board head running here

JOHNSTON
. . . trustee in Burnaby

A former Burnaby School Board chairman will seek a two-year vacancy on the Greater Victoria board of school trustees in elections next month.

Joan Johnston, a storefront officer with the provincial department of consumer and corporate affairs, has been a Victoria resident for six years, four of them in James Bay where she helped organize the community school.

Johnston was a trustee in Burnaby four years, serving as chairman the last year, and was board representative on Douglas College council two years.

The candidate said she has 25 years experience in business, including advertising, and is a parent and grandparent.

"One of my major concerns is with the primary and elementary classes," she said.

"This is the beginning of the whole educational process of the child and we must give adequate support."

There must be better links between city planners and school board to better provide for school needs, she said, citing the closure of some schools has caused upheaval in the community.

College to pay $1.9M

Camosun College council has agreed unanimously to spend $1.9 million for two buildings now occupied by Greater Victoria School Board.

The decision Thursday follows lengthy talks between Camosun and School District 61 representatives and a joint recommendation for the use of the school board's Paul Building administration office and adjoining media centre.

The school board is asked to pass the same recommendation, which will enable a request for funds to go to the management advisory committee for B.C. colleges.

Committee member Peter Dorazio said it was unfortunate the negotiations had taken so long, "but I think we're all reasonably happy with the results."

The school district will use the money to acquire a new administration centre.

Dorazio said the $1.9 million is deemed by both sides to be a fair price. If the management advisory committee supports the request, Education Minister Pat McGeer has said he would recommend it to the treasury board.

It is hoped the project can be launched in December, 1980, but Camosun is already short 20,000 square feet of teaching and support facilities and another year could add to space problems.

Camosun will ask for an additional $200,000 to make the necessary alterations to the buildings, making them suitable for classrooms.

Dorazio said the exchange price of $1.9 million was reached on the basis that the Paul Building cost taxpayers $800,000 and another $1.1 million is required to relocate school district headquarters.

Drug talks scheduled at schools

A man who has spoken to thousands of Ontario school children about drug problems will talk informally to pupils and parents in Victoria schools next week as part of the Alcohol and Youth theme of alcohol awareness week.

Norman Panzica, senior consultant to the Ontario Council on Drug Abuse in Toronto, will arrange school rap sessions as part of the program. Sponsors are B.C. Alcohol and Drug Commission, Greater Victoria Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society, Canadian Forces Base Alcohol Rehabilitation Service, Victoria Life Enrichment Society, Dallas House, Gillain Manor and the Salvation Army.

In a 600-student survey conducted last year in Sooke and Saanich school districts by the University of Victoria it was discovered more than 80 per cent drink on a regular basis.

Citing the report, those organizing the awareness program said it emphasizes the theme and draws attention to the fact that most youngsters polled drink alcohol between once and four times a month and become drunk at least once every six months. A smaller group drinks to the point of intoxication at least weekly.

A one-day seminar Thursday at Gillain Manor will be conducted by Rev. Gordon Grimm of Hazeldon Foundation's alcohol studies centre at Centre City, Minn. In a session designed for clergymen, topics such as the spiritual implications of alcoholism and the recovery of alcoholic ministers will be discussed.

Open house at Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Service, 733 Johnson, will be held Wednesday beginning at 10 a.m.

prodigy

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Child prodigies in music have been known to soar and burst upon the world scene like comets, but then to subside into a still efficient but less supernova role. And they have been known to diminish and die out completely like a pyrotechnical starshell.

But not Dylana Jenson. The violinist, a concert artist at the age of seven, at 18 is one of the major young artists on the world scene. Firmly established in an international career, music critics are confidently predicting that Dylana will fulfill and even stretch beyond, every ounce of that rare promise she has shown since she began violin lessons at the age of three.

Jenson

Dylana is the Victoria Symphony Orchestra's soloist for this weekend's pair of concerts.

The concerts Sunday and Monday at the Royal Theatre, will see the season's first guest conductor, Franz Paul Decker, on the podium. Under his baton Dylana will play the Violin Concerto in A minor by Carl Goldmark.

Dylana Jenson was known to audiences and hailed by discerning reviewers on three continents by the time she was 11. That year she performed the Tchaikovksy violin concerto in Central America and on tour with the Seattle Symphony. She went on to crown her early teenage career by winning the 1978 silver medal at the Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow.

She was the youngest person, and the first American woman violinist, ever to gain that honor.

The concerto programmed for her Victoria concerts is by an Austrian composer who was himself a gifted violinist in his youth. Goldmark belongs to the latter half of the 19th century and the early 20th. A thorough and dedicated musician, he was an accomplished writer for orchestra, his works showing a superb command of color and melodic invention.

The concerto is romantic, thoroughly rewarding to the violinist not only for its cascading virtuoso passages but for its lyrical and textural beauty.

Franz Paul Decker, born in Cologne and musically educated there, left the post of Municipal Director of Music in Krefeld to come to Canada in 1967, becoming music director and conductor of the Montreal Symphony, a post he stayed with for eight years.

International recognition came to him in 1975 as the conductor of Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, presented in Dallas with the great Canadian tenor, Jon Vickers as Tristan.

Decker has recorded for EMI and Deutsche Grammophon and is regarded as one of the eminent conductors of his generation.

A fascinating mixture of harp, bass, flute and guitar: that's Clannad, an instrumental-vocal ensemble that performs Irish traditional music and has developed a fine reputation in Europe and the United Kingdom.

It will make its first stage appearance in Canada at the McPherson Playhouse, Wednesday at 8 p.m., a presentation of the McPherson Foundation and the Vancouver Folk Music Festival.

Clannad is distinctly a family affair. All members of the group are related: Mare Ni Braohain (harp and vocals) performs with her brothers, Pol (flute, guitar and vocals) and Ciarain (double bass, guitar and vocals) and also her cousins, Padraigh O Dugain (mandola, harmonica and vocals) and Noel O Dugain (guitar and harmonium).

Together they create music that maintains strong ties to the long tradition of their native music — specifically Donegal — while exploring and blending in the styles of modern music.

Bohemian Folk Ballet of Prague stops in Victoria on its first North American tour

Cosmopolitan season here

A compact, good-looking season that has some super bright highlights is being offered Victoria entertainment-seekers by local impressario Allen Houghton.

It begins Wednesday at the Royal Theatre with a colorful and predictably virtuosic group — the Bohemian State Folk Ballet of Prague comprised of 40 dancers, singers and instrumentalists.

The culture of a proud people is reflected in the varied program, ranging from a wedding dance in Slovakia, a harvest dance of Southern Moravia, and a rebels' dance of 18th century highwaymen, to a dance of the highlanders of the High Tatras.

Russia's Mini-Bolshoi, now on a Canadian tour, has 15 of their finest ballet dancers presenting works from the classical repertory. They will be here at the Royal Nov. 14 and 15. On Nov.30 the Royal will host the Massenkoff Russian Folk Festival.

A musical based on the tragic life and the songs of French chanteuse Edith Piaf is a January offering and the revival of Canada's lively satirical revue, Spring Thaw, will be here in March.

There is no subscription all-in price for these attractions; they will be sold on a single ticket basis.

But a separate Houghton series of theatre presentations is available as a package.

It is a three-part series highlighted by the introduction to Victoria of the by-now famous and brilliantly successful all-Canadian show, Billy Bishop Goes to War. This is a show that has been acclaimed from the west coast where it all started (at the Vancouver East Cultural Centre) to eastern Canada and New York. It will be at the McPherson in mid-March.

This package is being launched Monday at McPherson Playhouse with David Y.H. Lui's production of the musical, Jacques Brel is ... Starring in Brel are popular Victorians Dan Costain and Sheila McCarthy. Each of these talented performers have been outstanding in Belfry Theatre productions; notably in Puttin' On the Ritz, which was the show-talk of the town in 1977, both here and at the David Y.H. Lui Theatre in Vancouver where it enjoyed a long summer run.

Interest in the poetry and songs of Brel soared last year following his death at the age of 48. The melodious show, filled with drama, poignancy and humor and performed by a different cast, was seen two summers ago in another Houghton production at the Empress Hotel.

The package-deal theatre series concludes in March with a production of Bernard Slade's comedy, Same Time Next Year.

The theatre package is cosponsored by the McPherson Playhouse Foundation. Tickets for both single events and the package are on sale at all McPherson box office outlets.

Candlelight concert trio

By AUDREY JOHNSON

One of the events that have become an annual treat in this city, are Amity Singers' candlelight concerts in the Empress Hotel Crystal Ballroom.

Signalling the opening of the Amity season, the concerts have been extended to three this year and will take place next week on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

The theme, taken from Shakespeare, is "If music be the food of love." It will be carried out in a series of songs and interpolated poems beginning with the "courtly love" of the 16th century and carrying through to pops numbers representing "love as it is" in the modern world.

Guest conductor for this trio of concerts is one of the most gifted and dynamic choral conductors in the Pacific Northwest — Bruce Pullan. Pullan has been an outstanding guest soloist in choral presentations in Victoria. As conductor of the Vancouver Bach Choir provided a highlight of the recent CBC Festival Victoria series of concerts.

The new Candlelight programs will offer, first, a group of 16th century English madrigals followed by four songs of Vaughan Williams plus two traditional English ballads to represent the subject of "Country Love."

Second half will begin with a lively group of English folk songs before turning to the love ballads of our own time and idiom.

The concerts are presented in cabaret style with the audience seated at tables. Tickets include refreshments and are available from the Tudor Sweet Shoppe in Oak Bay Village and at Leaf Hill Galleries, 47 Bastion Square.

A subscription for the entire Amity season is a good musical bargain. For $17 (adult) or $13.50 (students and Senior Citizens), the subscriber also gets the Amity Christmas and the April concert conducted by Brian Law, one of last season's Victoria Symphony guest maestros and a noted Canadian choral conductor.

Amity's official music director, Jon Washburn, will conduct the Christmas program which will include Benjamin Britten's lovely A Ceremony of Carols, Pergolesi's Magnificat and Buxtehude's In Dulci Jubilo.

There will be harp and string accompaniment and the traditional audience sing-along of popular carols. It will take place in Christ Church Cathedral.

Forget those tales of woe in the music industry. Epic Records' REO Speedwagon has just wrapped up the first leg of a three-part tour and already they've grossed $2.5 million — playing to 256,450 concert fans. Wails lead guitarist Gary Richrath, "If only all 256,450 of those people had been girls ... and if only I had the time to meet all or them."

Lawrence Welk's California license plate reads, A1 AN A2.

The parents of the late rock and roll singer Buddy Holly have filed a $300,000 suit against the company that purchased the rights to film The Buddy Holly Story." The suit, filed in Texas by Mr. and Mrs. L.O. Holley, accuses Innovisions Inc. of Pennsylvania of violating a 1975 contract under which the Holleys said they were to receive annual payment of 3 per cent of the film's net profits. And according to the suit, the couple was depicted as unsupportive of Holly's musical abilities and career when "in fact they were" and that cinematic inaccuracy has caused the Holleys embarrassment and humiliation.

After a performance in Vancouver, renowned flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya was greeted backstage at the Orpheum by B.C. tourism director John Plul who presented him with a commemorative provincial pin and medallion.

Victor Borge doesn't like redundancy — fire or no fire. Two years ago during his Broadway run, smoke from a blaze in an alley filled the theatre, stirring a breath of panic in the audience. Quipped the Great Dane, "I will now play Handel's Water Music." It did the trick and the show went on. It happened again in Chicago, but Borge wasn't about to do an exact reprise. Said he, as fear surged through his audience. "Now I will play Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." He did — and turned a potential stampede into laughter.

Jaclyn Smith and new husband Dennis Cole showed up at a Hollywood disco skating party to promote the Columbia film Skatetown, U.S.A., and were so barraged by papparazzi they had to flee through a back door without ever taking the dance floor ... Simone Signoret is co-starring in Europe with Jean Rochefort in I sent a Letter to My Love ... Faye Dunaway has just opened an antique shop in California ... Conductor Richard Kapp, whose last album was The Greatest Hits of 1720, opens a new operetta titled The Free Lance Nov. 20 in Ames, Iowa.

Jill Clayburgh as a U.S. singer in Rome hosts party for son Matthew Barry

Theme pushes bounds

By LES WEDMAN

North American filmmakers think they tackle controversial subjects but it's the Europeans who do it. Federico Fellini did it with Roma and Casanova. Luis Bunuel does it with almost every film. Louis Malle did it with Pretty Baby. Pier Paolo. Pasolini did it with his Gospel According to St. Matthew and his final film, before he was murdered, was Salo. It's been banned practically everywhere.

Bernardo Bertolucci's Last Tango in Paris found disfavor with many censors. The Conformist proved Bertolucci could be daring and discreet. Now comes his lates film, Luna, which the Ontario film censor already has taken offense over. The subject — as was Louis Malle's Murmur of the Heart — is incest between a mother and her 'teen-aged son. Jill Clayburgh is the mother, an opera singer, and newcomer Matthew Barry is her son.

Luna, filmed in English, on colorful and offbeat locations in Rome, is Bertolucci's eighth feature film and his first since his critically-acclaimed 1900 which was released three years ago. His Last Tango in Paris, after more than five years, still is banned from Italian movie screens.

Twentieth-Century Fox is releasing Luna with its delicate theme that a number of other films already have undertaken to deal with. Obviously the distributor is hoping Luna will shine more brightly than Last Tango and Bertolucci came to the U.S. to be at the New York Film Festival when his movie was shown there.

The 20th Century Fox tactic was double-pronged. The festival premiere for Luna got a lot of free publicity that caught the attention of more than the "art market." Now, in its general release of Luna, Fox is putting it into commercial houses, not art theatres.

Also Fox demanded that Bertolucci deliver to it a film that would definitely get a Restricted rating in the U.S. He's done that, even if he did cut some footage from the film just minutes before a press screening in New York. What he snipped isn't known because Luna still has actual mother-and-son sex scenes that stop of being wholly sexplicit.

Bertolucci, who wrote the screenplay with his younger brother, Giuseppe and Clare Peloe, said in an interview that "it wasn't written in the script whether or not there would be intercourse. I said we'd just go on and see . . . and I pushed Jill very much towards this degradation of the mother." He said he feels that incest, once it is consummated, is violent. Incest, the italian insisted, is a fantasy everyone has. (It's interesting to note that in France incest in film is considered unspeakable. So when Louis Malle made his Murmur of the Heart he had the mother played by Lea Masari, an Italian actress, which gave French audiences an out in accepting the film).

Luna had a brief, arugmentative history in Italy apart from the sexual subject. It was criticized for being done in English and for its portrayal of an Italian Communist as a sports car playboy.

Bankrolling the venture, 20th Century Fox "believed very strongly in the film." according to Bertolucci, and a Fox executive confirmed that, saying they liked the film. They liked it a lot. So much so that in its ads, the sales pitch advises potential ticket buyers "between a mother and son. Between the delicate boundaries of love."

Bertolucci was asked if Luna is about the sex life of opera singers or is it about opera singers who commit incest or is it about incest among opera stars or what? The reply brought applause from other press people who resent stupid questions. "I think you have to think what you think," said Bertolucci.

The 38-year-old unmarried Bertolucci explained why, for the first time, his main character is a woman. "I wanted to face a woman who was independent without suport from a man."

He said he picked Jill Clayburgh because he like her a lot and "because she has this allure onstage, but in life she is someone you could meet on the street. She's not a conventinal big-chested opera singer." In his opinion, outside of Jane Fonda in Coming Home, "American stars do not do heavy erotic scenes."

He admits he's a voyeur. "If you like movies you are a voyeur. I think we all accept that."

Connery won't hide under rug

By RODERICK MANN
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — You can usually spot the older actors out at the beach, they will tell you, because when the wind is blowing from the sea they're the ones with their hands on their heads — trying to keep their toupees in place.

Indeed, hairpieces are so commonplace here that one TV newscaster has three: one with short hair, one with medium-length hair and one with long hair.

When he is sporting the latter he will tell people quite fearlessly: "I really must find time to get a trim."

Because of all this it makes a pleasant change to sit down to lunch with Sean Connery, a rugged individualist who doesn't have much hair on top and doesn't give a damn who knows it. Indeed, he finds the whole Hollywood preoccupation with looking young rather pathetic.

"I joined in a conversation at a party the other night," he said, "and it was five minutes before I realized what they were talking about. The man said: 'You work without one, don't you?' I looked baffled and then I realized they were talking about hairpieces. Everyone's obsessed with looks in this town.

"Now in fact I do wear a hairpiece in the film I made here recently. But that's only because it's that kind of part. Since I finished with the Bond films I've deliberately avoided wearing one wherever possible."

The film for which he has donned a "rug," as they are called, is "Meteor," the $13 million disaster film which was directed by Britain's Ronald Neame — $500,000 of which was spent on a sequence in which Sean has a million pounds of mud dumped on him.

And you thought movie-making was fun!

Connery is one of Britain's few international names. And he is certainly the only British actor I know who has been voted among the Top 10 by Man Watchers Inc., a women's organization which every year trots out a list of the fellows their members admire.

Connery was called "intriguing, smooth, urbane with savoir-faire and class." Not bad for a once poor Scottish boy who came out of the Navy with a dollar-a-week pension for ulcers.

Well, smooth and urbane he may well be on the screen. But in real life 49-year-old Sean is a fairly tough cookie. With the commendable quality of loyalty.

When one of New York's leading women columnists ripped into actress Cornelia Sharpe — Sean's romantic lead in the recent film "The Next Man" — claiming that she got the part only because she was the girlfriend of the producer, Sean telephoned the columnist and threatened to shove her comments down her throat.

"What did she say?" I asked.

"She didn't say anything," said Sean. "She was speechless."

But why had he done it? Wasn't it true?

"That's not the point," he said. "She was entitled to say what she liked about Cornelia's performance. But not to comment on why the girl got the part."

Connery likes Hollywood. "This is where it's all happening as far as films are concerned," he said. "And it's nice to hear good talk again. Since I moved to Spain from Britain three years ago that's something I've missed — conversation and stimulus. But this is only a good place to be if you're working."

Sean likes Marbella, where he lives. But its remoteness from the film scene presents some problems. As in the case of "A Bridge Too Far."

Sean was signed early for that epic, long before most of the Hollywood big names. So it came as a shock when his wife Micheline read in the paper just how much money the American heavyweights were getting (Robert Redford picked up a reported $2 million).

"At first I thought it must be a mistake," Sean said. "But then I learned it wasn't so I went to Joe Levine (the producer) and demanded more money."

And was your money increased?

"It was. By 50 percent."

Connery still expects to play James Bond again in his friend Kevin McClory's film "Warhead" (McClory has certain rights to the Bond name because of his participation in the film "Thunderball," which he produced and helped write).

"There are still problems to be overcome," said Connery. "But the film will be made, I'm sure of that."

Connery . . . doesn't give a damn

Farah sacks agent

HOLLYWOOD (LAT) — Normally, when an actor or actress fires an agent or manager, it doesn't qualify as news — it happens too often.

But in the case of Farrah Fawcett, the story is worth noting.

Daily Variety's Todd McCarthy reported that the actress, who came to fame as one of the original "Charlie's Angels" and left the show two seasons back to pursue a career in feature films, has given the pink slip to her personal manager, Jay Bernstein.

Bernstein, who as a manager and one-time press agent has a client list that includes Susan Saint James, Suzanne Somers, and Donald Sutherland, told McCarthy that he was working on a seven-to-eight year plan designed to "make Farrah a legend like Jean Harlow or Marilyn Monroe."

Bernstein, in a telephone interview, said the parting with his client was amicable. Although if Fawcett were to start a movie tomorrow, contractually he would be entitled to a commission, he added he has released the actress from all obligations.

Public Announcement

For the past year the Commission has been taking advantage of its public hearings to give people in the areas being visited the opportunity to be heard on all questions of local or regional interest that are within the Commission's competence. Groups and individuals wishing to appear were invited to present themselves to the Commission the evening before the public hearing was called, for a night session.

By this Public Announcement, the Commission wishes to inform the public that, except on special occasions, it can no longer continue to hold night sessions. Henceforth, general observations that the public wishes to submit to the Commission will be heard at the beginning of the hearings rather than the evening before as has been the practice for the past year.

Any group or individual wishing to appear before the Commission to present general observations should do so in accordance with section 37 of the Rules of Procedure and they will be heard at the public hearing, usually as soon as the hearing is in session.

Section 37 states that the Commission may allow community groups or individuals to make representations with respect to matters of local or regional interest in the region in which the public hearing is to be heard, when comments are received at least two clear days before the day fixed for the commencement of a public hearing.

HELP!

The Canadian judicial system has found me 'not guilty' of all charges initiated by the Attorney General's Department of British Columbia.

Now is the time for the Attorney General to take decisive measures to correct the grave injustice caused by my arrest and costly trial, and the resultant false and unfair stigma brought upon myself and the people I represent. The Attorney General's Department should take immediate action to bring an end to criminal burnings and bombings.

Members of the organization, which I represent, wish only to live in peace and to work to build a better Canada. We have nothing to do with fanatical groups such as Freedomites. And we appeal to all responsible Canadians to urge their elected representatives to see that true justice is done.

the galleries

Two prominent British Columbia artists will have side-by-side openings next week at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. On Wednesday a series of drawings depicting the activity of the West Vancouver waterfront by B.C. Binning will open together with an exhibition of new works by Donald Harvey.

Harvey, a professor of visual arts at the University of Victoria, presentsfour of a series of graphite drawings exploring the diamond shape,as well as six paintings which resulted from these explorations.

Harvey views the diamond shape as less limiting than the square or rectangle. He describes the paintings as formal: "the black ones are staccato, as opposed to the perhaps Mozartean sweetness of the white paintings. That appeals to me in the sense that they kick each other a little bit. I think it is important to have these polarities."

Binning made his drawings without preliminary sketches or underdrawing. He would ride his bicycle in search of an interesting subject, then set to work. Thus the drawings have an immediacy which evokes the nostalgic spirit of summer vacations.

Also on view at the Victoria Art Gallery are Joan Martin's Gardens of the Italian Renaissance. Martin is a Canadian artist who spent the past summer in Rome studying Roman and renaissance buildings and their accompanying formal gardens.

There will be free admission during four days of Open House week at the gallery — Thursday through Sunday. Visitors should be sure not to miss the fascinating gift shop and the informal quiet of the Gallery Cafe.

Other shows opening next week include some appealing recent water colors by Della S. Paranich at The Little Gallery, 725 Yates (preview Thursday at 7:30 p.m.), the Sunday introduction (opens 1 p.m.) to an important exhibition of the Kyoto Woodcuts by Naoko Matsubara at The Maples Gallery, West Saanich and Keating Cross Roads, and an exhibition of sculpture experiments and works in progress by students of the University of Victoria visual arts department at Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort.

The work is being done under the direction of Ruth Beer and is part of the current space-forms collaboratory project at the gallery.

Raymond Verdaguer opens Tuesday at the Backroom Gallery with black/white and colored woodcuts. His marine and coastal scenes run until Saturday, Nov. 3 at the gallery, 2070 Oak Bay Ave. Following will be Valentina Polushins Slavic Strings and Nudes, gouache paintings, Nov. 6 to 17; two painters and two printmakers Nov. 20 to Dec. 1 — Rosemary James cross, Lilian Rogers, Poul Salling, Ann Rosemary Conway — a colorful and varied show of four local artists.

Farley goes to war

AND NO BIRDS SANG, by Farley Mowat. McClelland & Stewart. $13.95.

Farley Mowat is so well known as a writer about the north, a keen naturalist and a generally boisterous personality that his new book may come as a surprise. And No Birds Sang is an account of Mowat's experiences during the Second World War, from his first eager, abortive efforts to enlist in 1940 to one shattering Christmas Day in 1943. Like other Mowat Books it's funny, angry and moving by turns, but And No Birds Sang is more than this. It's an unlikely-to-be-forgotten illustration of the close relationship between courage and fear.

The book is divided into four sections, each preceded by a fragment of war poetry which reminds us that the experiences of this one particular soldier are linked with the universal. Part I ("My friend, you would not tell with such high zest./To children ardent for some desperate glory,/The old lie . . .") opens with Farley's father delivering the "bloody big news" that "war is on!"

The senior Mowat will be an enigma to anyone born after 1945. "Fired by the ideals of Empire," he had gone off to battle in the First World War and returned with a useless right arm. Despite this he became an "impassioned supporter of the peacetime volunteer militia," eager to see his only son join his old infantry regiment and help make the world safe from fascism.

The regiment was the Hastings and Prince Edward, better known as the Hasty Pees. At first Farley demurred, preferring the Air Force, and attempted to enlist — the day after his 19th birthday — on his own. He was pronounced four pounds underweight and failed. He made it into the Hasty Pees, though, when an army doctor who was an old friend of his father's "sent me off to drink as much water as I could hold. Well ballasted and gurgling like an over-full bathtub, I passed the examination with flying colors."

Two years later Mowat was a full lieutenant and declared ready for overseas draft. His training in England included losing his virginity, keeping his minuscule moustache, and as air liaison officer arranging for 12 Spitfires to "attack" a VIP picnic which, too late, he learned was being attended by HM King George VI.

Part II ("I would have thought of them . . . in pity . . . that this gay machine of splendor'd soon be broken") describes the regiment's assault landing in Sicily as part of Operation Husky, Mowat's first exposures to death, his sudden anger at his father, and his view, first as a platoon commander and later as an intelligence officer of the war in Sicily.

Part III ("And Death fell with me, like a deepening moan") contains Mowat's anger at the way battle-sore men were treated by their Canadian staff ("Like inmates of a reform school"), at least three incidents in which he barely escapes death, and his experiences in mainland Italy. (As part of Montgomery's Eighth Army, the Hasty Pees were ordered to head north to assist the U.S. Fifth Army at Salerno.)

This section is highlighted by Mowat's accounts of his contacts with Italian civilians, soldiers and partisans. There are some embarrassing bloopers, a splendid bluff that Bart Bandy himself would have been hard-pressed to rival, and much anger at the pathetic plight of the refugees who suffered under the Germans' "scorched-earth" policy.

Part IV ("And all thought dwindled to a moan") describes one month in 1943. During that month Mowat learned the truth of his father's warning in a letter to Italy: "The most unfortunate ones after any war are not those with missing limbs; they are the ones who have had their spiritual feet knocked out from under them."

Mowat's descriptions of the battles in which he played a part are so vivid it seems evident that he has nearly total recall. Especially impressive are his portraits of his fellow officers and the men of his platoon. His regimental commander, incidentally, was Major Lord John Tweedsmuir, son of a famous father and "a tall, fair-haired English romantic out of another age."

And No Birds Sang ends without revealing some of the things the reader wants to know, but it also tells us all we need ever know about others. Farley Mowat has done an effective job of combining letters and memories into a book which leaves no doubt that war — for all its gaiety, excitement and valor — is at bottom a filthy, bloody, shattering ordeal.

Kissinger remembers with verve

WHITE HOUSE YEARS, by Henry A. Kissinger. Little, Brown. $24.50.

The first volume of Henry A. Kissinger's memoirs is longer than Leo Tolstoy's War and Peace, and we don't even get to Watergate. The question is, is it worth the time it takes to read it? The answer is yes. Of course, it is self-serving — especially on Cambodia and Chile and the "Christmas bombings" of North Vietnam in 1972 — but the principal purpose of almost any memoir is to serve the self.

Consider, first, the style. Kissinger's years in the White House and the State Department did not, miraculously, repress his impulse to write decent prose. If his irony shades often into sarcasm, at least he is acquainted with irony. Other memoirs of the first Nixon administration, not counting William Safire's, seem to have been written by ticker-tape machines after midnight on Wall Street, while nobody human was looking.

Pith counts. On the White House reaction to the shooting down of an American reconnaissance plane by the North Koreans: "It was as if someone had pushed a button labelled 'crisis management' and the answer that came up was 'nonchalance.'" On H.R. Haldeman, for whom government was basically an exercise in public relations: "It was risky to approach Haldeman, since he was likely to interpret any substantive concern as a sign of emotional instability."

Anecdotes help, too. From the gooney birds on Midway to the hilarious textile negotiations with Japan to the flap about a nonexistent baby water buffalo to the meeting in the White House with a nun and two Catholic laymen who had been named unindicted co-conspirators in a plot to kidnap him, Kissinger has a lively eye and some charm. He will also deprecate himself, and, twice, admits fallibility: wiretapping may require "more stringent safeguards," and he should not perhaps have given the impression to journalists that he had opposed the Christmas bombings.

To be sure, buzz words abound. They include "linkage," "equilibrium," "ambiguity," "fashionable," "whipsaw," "rout," "honor" and "impotence." And there are occasional lapses into the sermonette, on such subjects as the history of Russia, India and Pakistan, and the motivation of the younger generation that opposed our "historical misadventure" in Vietnam. Nevertheless, the Dean Acheson who wrote Present at the Creation — and whom Kissinger admires almost as much as he does Chou Enlai and somewhat more than he admires the shah of Iran — would not have sniffed at the style of "White House Years" and would probably have agreed with its geopolitics.

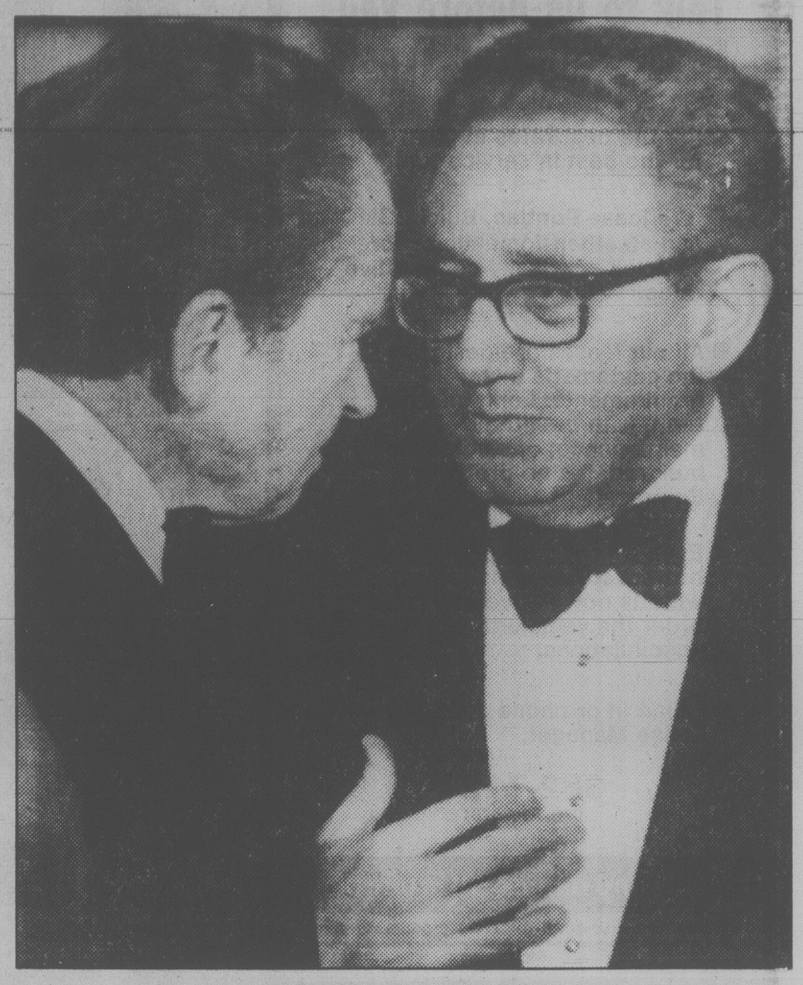

As for substance, how can we fail to be interested in the summit meetings with Mao Tsetung and Leonid I. Brezhnev and Golda Meir and Eisaku Sato, the SALT talks and the secret negotiations with the Russians, the Chinese, the Germans and Le Duc (Ducky) Tho? Richard M. Nixon's initiative to open our relations with China, so ably abetted by Kissinger, was a stunning success. Kissinger's "shuttle diplomacy," for a while anyway, kept the lid on in the Middle East. The only boring pages in White House Years are those devoted to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and even Marcel Proust could not have made NATO interesting.

On the secret bombing and subsequent "incursion" of Cambodia, he disagrees with his formidable critic, the William Shawcross who wrote Sideshow after Kissinger refused to talk to him. On Chile, he is brisk: it was in our national interest to prevent Salvador Allende Gossens from remaining president of Chile "through a fluke in the Chilean political system," which fluke was Allende's having been elected by a plurality rather than a majority — a fluke which could happen even in the United States. On Vietnam, he makes it clear that the North Vietnamese wanted total victory, on the field of battle or at the bargaining table. According to Kissinger, we bombed them into a peace treaty, which treaty might have preserved a viable South if it hadn't been for Watergate, to be discussed in Volume II. In the meantime, between Nixon's first inauguration and the Nobel prize-winning treaty, another 19,000 Americans died.

On the vagaries of Nixon — courageous, Kissinger tells us, "secretive and devious," lacking "in self-confidence or largeness of spirit," and "beside himself" so often he must have been twins — Kissinger is shrewd and not altogether lacking in compassion. From the beginning, Nixon wanted to run his own foreign policy, and Kissinger was his Lone Ranger, carrying that policy around in his saddlebags, and Secretary of State William P. Rogers was kept constantly in the dark. Kissinger agrees that this was "a poor system," but, really, the State Department and the Department of Defence dragged their heels when they didn't agree with a presidential directive. Kissinger also allows as how there were a number of presidential directives he ignored, while waiting for the temperature in the Oval Office to cool down.

And he loved it — the helicopters and the motorcycle escorts, the sunglasses and the fake stomach-aches, the hand-written messages carried by personal pouch from China through Pakistan to Washington, the conversations with Andre Malraux, if not with Oriana Fallaci. As a kind of Julien Sorel who went to Washington, he was Nixon's own Harvard professor, snatched away from Nelson A. Rockefeller. He tells us that the only time while he was in office that he couldn't sleep was on the eve of his flight to China.

Bird sketches by a master

By HAROLD HOSFORD

A SKETCHBOOK OF BIRDS, by C. F. Tunnicliffe, R.A., introduction by Ian Niall. Clarke, Irwin. $23.95.

Charles Tunnicliffe's work may not be as well known in North America as it is in Europe, but in A Sketchbook of Birds, a belated step has been taken to rectify this by making examples of this great British artist's work available in North America for the first time.

Tunnicliffe died last February, at 78. He had devoted his life to art and had established himself as one of the finest English engravers, water-colorists and illustrators since Thomas Bewick. He specialized in natural history subjects, for which he displayed a special sensitivity. It is this sensitivity that flows from page after page of A Sketchbook of Birds.

As the name implies, this is a book of the artist's field sketches — not finished works — and as such they are a special delight. They are examples of Tunnicliffe's work covering nearly 30 of his most productive years. While some of his subjects may be unfamiliar to North Americans, his renditions of them reveal that rare gift of being able to capture that fleeting instant of action ... it marks the great artist, something we can all appreciate.

The illustrations used in the book were selected by the artist's sister, Dorothy Downes, and by Ian Niall and his wife. Niall, a name familiar to readers of Country Life, also wrote a brief introduction. Aside from these few words, the book is Tunnicliffe and his work — 130 pages of pencil sketches and watercolors, each with pencilled notes by the artist, made at the time the work was done, notes which reveal the naturalist within the artist.

Tunnicliffe lived most of his life on the island of Angelsey in North Wales — an area noted for its waterbirds — and 90 pages are devoted to these species.

Another aspect of the book which will endear it to expatriate Britons will be the place names which go with each sketch. Names like Alderley Edge, Macclesfield (the artists birthplace), Bont Farm, Gawsworth Pool, Northwich and Radnor Mere, are certain to evoke memories in those who know Cheshire well.

Typically Canadian: the good and bad

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

JENNIFER, by David Helwig. Oberon. $6.95.

CREATURES OF THE CHASE, by Jean-Yves Soucy. McClelland & Stewart. $12.95.

Jennifer Mallen, 40, lives in "the special kind of solitude of a woman alone with her children." Jennifer is the kind of woman — if there is a kind; better to say she is a woman — who speculates as she opens another beer that "Life (is) a fatal disease no matter how you (live) it." And if there is irony there, even humor, then so be it. This novel by David Helwig is full of irony and humor, most of it seemingly unintended by its author.

Helwig is a serious writer, and Jennifer is a serious novel — why else the quotation from The Republic that prefaces it? Plato's admirable statement is a call to observe a life that is "orderly and brave," but in Helwig's hands those virtues are somehow transmuted into mere dullness, and Jennifer herself into a cardboard figure whose words and actions betray a monumental lack of perception. The most interesting character in the book is her son Gavin, eight, but his walk-on parts seem intended only as comic relief to the drama.

I sense here a fine daytime drama series in embryo . . . one typically Canadian, whatever that means. But I'm sure you know.

Typically Canadian, perhaps is Jean-Yves Soucy's first novel, Creatures of the Chase. Soucy is a fine writer with a sure eye for both nature and humankind's place in it, and his novel is more proof that the peculiar genre of "outdoor novel" is still flourishing in Canada.

Mathieu has been hunting and trapping in northern Quebec for more than 25 years. From the incredible bear hunt that opens the book (Marian Engel take note!) to the lake scene that ends it, we are in a very special world, a world where "death keeps its eyes open" and where Mathieu, with l'Indien as his occasional companion, lives a life that is almost dream-like in its arduousness and simplicity.

But, Soucy writes, ". . . there was still a barrier between a man like him and nature . . . even though he felt himself more animal than man."

Then at his brother's farm on a visit, Mathieu meets Mademoiselle Robitault, Margeurite, and the chase — the uniquely human chase that every forest animal also knows — is on. And nothing is ever the same again.

Creatures of the Chase is not, it must be said, a psychological novel. In fact, Soucy's depiction of Margeurite in particular seems downright ridiculous at times. If the book could be labelled apart from its naturalistic genre, one would not be far amiss in calling it existential. Yes, even that! For the lives here are lived in the immediate present. There is no past or future, there are no assumptions, there can be no predictions.

But then, it seems, human nature will have its way and guide these creatures on to paths as old as the forest they call home.

And the paths lead apart, eventually. Whether it must be so for any two people in a similar situation — as if such a situation as Mathieu's and Marguerite's could ever be similar for anyone! — Soucy leaves for his readers to wonder.

This tender novel would, I should say, make a very fine film if the right Canadian director was ever committed to it.

Herman and Herd hit Victoria Thursday night

'I dig Woody. . .'

There is a citizen in New York nicknamed Sidewalk Stanley. Stanley is probably the most devout Woody Herman fan in the world. For years, Stanley has walked the streets carrying a drum cymbal under one arm and a Herman album under the other.

Once, Stanley quite inadvertently helped in the capture of a thief. In the glow of instant heroism, a TV reporter thrust his mike into Stanley's face and asked him what he did.

"I dig Woody, man," Stanley replied instantly. And so have thousands of others ranging from the indefatigable Stanley to the late Igor Stravinsky, who wrote Ebony Concerto for Woody in 1946 just because he dug the band.

This year Charles Woodrow Herman marks his 43rd year as a bandleader and appears with his Thundering Herd this coming Thursday in Victoria for one concert only at the University Centre Auditorium as the eighth presentation in the CFAX Legend Series.

One of Herman's most unique distinctions is that is able to please the kids of the kids he pleased 20 years ago — his music has always been for the young.

This year Herman has been riding high with his hottest record in quite a while, Chick, Donald, Walter and Woodrow. It consists of a suite written for him by Chick Corea and several pieces by Steely Dan. One of the latter will surely be heard at the Victoria concert.

Nostalgia seekers, however, are generally well-served also.

jazz

By LEONARD FEATHER
Los Angeles Times

You don't have to be very long in the tooth to feel nostalgic about live radio. Many of today's jazz fans, in their 30s and early 40s, may have been introduced to music by the eagerly awaited sounds of the big bands on which were known as "sustaining" (i.e. non-sponsored) late night remotes.

At the risk of waking up late and almost missing grade school classes, millions of young North Americans waited for their nocturnal kicks. Would duke Ellington be on tonight from the Hurricane? Would the Grand Terrace send forth Earl Hines' big band sounds over the Blue Network? Was John Kirby still jumping at the Pump Room? Count Basie at the Lincoln?

Audiences comparable to those who now turn to Johnny Carson (perhaps "Saturday Night Live" would be a better analogy) had their radios set for whichever of the network stations might be carrying these 15 or 30 minute segments, heard nightly during the halcyon days from as early as 10 p.m. clear through until 1 a.m. There were even after broadcasts in the very early years; some older fans recall hearing Chick Webb's band, with vocals by Ella Fitzgerald, in matinee sessions over NBC.

Such delights tapered off during gthe years when TV took over while live radio entertainment and, ipso facto, all live jazz died out. With the demise in 1972 of the Arthur Godfrey CBS show, by then the only remaining daily network series of its kind, radio was reduced to a transmitter of sports, news and endless recorded music, a format that has prevailed ever since. The dance band network remotes did continue, however, in one lone holdout, the New Year's Eve specials, but even those were dropped a few years ago.

Then came a rare and priceless renewal and enlargement of the tradition, in the form of National Public Radio's "Jazz Alive!" A program so bold in objective and so successful in outcome that the exclamation point is well deserved, "Jazz Alive!" is celebrating its third anniversary as the only weekly national radio program of jazz in public performance.

The 1979 fall season kicked off with an example of the series' more popular and accessible aspects — Mel Torme backed by Gerry Mulligan's orchestra — at the Kennedy Center in Washington. This was followed, however, by a sharp turn leftward that indicates the program's insistent breadth of scope: Archie Shepp, the 1960s radical of the saxophone, symbol of racial pride and political consciousness, shared a program with drummer Max Roach who, like Shepp, is a musician, educator and spokesman for black music.

Shepp and Roach were both taped live at the Ann Arbor, Mich., Jazz Festival. Live radio, you see, isn't always literally live; but live-on-tape, complete with audience reaction, beats listening to a disc jockey dishing up schlock pop or nostalgia.

"Actually," says producer Tim Owens, "several of our best shows really have been live. We carried the entire White House Jazz Festival in June of 1978, with President Carter introducing an all star cast. We did New Year's Eve live remotes in "77 and '78, picking up shows from clubs in various cities. Chick Corea and Woody Herman were on live from the Newport Jazz Festival in the summer of '78.

"Our next live-live broadcast will be 'Billy Taylor and Friends,' Oct. 29 from New york, with Billy leading a 19-piece orchestra, with Dexter Gordon on saxophone and Johnny Hartman as guest vocalist."

"Jazz Alive" has helped enhance the public awareness not merely of the big bands of those old remote days, but also of the eclecticisms of fusion music, the updated rhythms of bebop, and the undated progressivisms of the avant garde. These educational and entertainment ventures are primarily the brain children of two men, both 30 years old, both steeped in jazz lore.

A major participant in carrying the torch for the series was Steve Rathe, now its executive producer, whose radio experience dates back to his early teen years. Listeners in Glen Rock, N.J., picking up a weak local signal that bore such messages as: "Hello, this is Steve Rathe on WSRM: and now here is 'Itsy Bitsy Teenie Weenie Yellow Polka Dot Bikini'" might have been taken aback to learn that the call letters were the initials of Steve M. Rathe, who used a library ranging from old 78s by Enrico Caruso, borrowed from his grandfather, to "Bikini" and other youth-aimed pop singles. The prodigious disc jockey built and operated WSMR out of his parents' basement.

After earning a B.S. in radio, television and film at Ithaca College, N.Y., Rathe became a cable TV pioneer, producing and directing several shows for an Ithaca cable station from 1969-71. He worked for Canadian Broadcasting Corp. before signing up in 1974 with National Public Radio, where he hosted "Folk Festival U.S.A." before embarking on "Jazz Alive!"

Owens, another lifelong devotee of radio, was hanging around a Thousand Oaks, Cal., station at 14, where he was first a pinch-hit announcer, then won a regular dee jay shift, and at 16 became the news director. While at the University of California at Santa Barbara, he was music director of the college station, rising in the ranks to general manager by his senior year.

By taking care of the technical end, and by setting up broadcasts from locations where the audience reaction adds to the live ambiance, Owens is able to transmit, via the 220 NPR noncommercial member stations, a sense of the improvisatory spirit essential to the best jazz.

No need to wait year for swallows of Iquitos

Frontier town is gateway to Amazon adventureland

By BOBBIE JUSTICE

IQUITOS, Peru — Each afternoon precisely at six o'clock the crowd gathers.

In the main plaza of this frontier town, tourists anxiously await the daily phenomenon.

Just as the amber twilight is about to fade into darkness, they appear on the horizon—the swallows.

The sky is clouded by their winging. They arrive by the thousands.

Unlike the swallows of Capistrano that return only once a year, the swallows of Iquitos appear each afternoon exactly at dusk.

"One day about three years ago the swallows arrived unexpectedly, and they've been returning ever since," Paul Wright who runs Amazon Safari Camp and operates cruises on the river, said.

As six o'clock approached we waited expectantly.

"Here they come," someone shouted.

Dark spots appeared on the horizon, then overhead. First flying east, then west, then another direction in graceful formation through the twilight. Their nearness caused several of us to step back against an office building.

As if on cue, the first of the birds swarmed into a dark, funnel-shaped cloud and dipped to perches in the plaza's trees. The show continued for about 20 minutes until every inch of the barren branches was filled by the perky little birds.

In silhouette they appeared to be leaves against the darkening sky.

And then a hush fell over the bird-filled square.

The swallows are just one of the mysteries attracting tourists to this headwater area of the mighty Amazon River.

Most adventurers are headed for the jungle (more accurately the rain forest) and Amazon Safari Camp, a rustic, thatched-roof lodge on the Rio Momon, a tributary of the Amazon.

Two-day, one-night packages are offered at the camp for $95 single, $85 per person double. Three-day, two-night packages are $130 single and $115 per person for two to four adventurers.

Some tourists opt for the Amazon River Adventure Cruise aboard the 14-cabin Adolfo. The four-day, three-night cruise leaves Iquitos each Wednesday and arrives in Letitia, Colombia, on Saturday. The cost of the trip is $295 per person in a twin-bedroom, $270 per person in a triple and $245 in a room shared by four.

After a 25-minute boat ride the camp comes into sight, looking just as all of us expected it would, with only William Holden, Gregory Peck or Johnny Weissmuller missing from the scene.

Most of the central building is an open porch, with a portion screened in for a dining room that has oil-cloth-covered tables. Hammocks are strung along the river side of the porch, and rough-hewn tables and plastic-strung chairs are provided for socializing.

Thatched-roof boardwalks link the central building with the guest rooms. Each has two single beds, a bare wooden floor, a wooden chair and a stand in the corner for a big enameled washbasin and a pitcher of water.

Most of the rooms have private toilets. (Private is a bit overstated, because the ceilings are wire netting, and there is no noise barrier between rooms.)

Still, nobody expected a Holiday Inn. We had come to experience life along the Amazon, much as it's been for centuries.

It was a relief to get out of travelling clothes and into loose-fitting, sleeveless cottons and sneakers. Earlier plans for long-sleeve shirts (to protect against insects) and boots (to guard against jungle denizens) had been changed by William Doughty, representative for the safari camp.

"Insects come out only from dusk to dawn, and tennis shoes are perfect for balancing on the felled trees that are part of the jungle trail," Doughty explained.

Our troop of 17 men, women and children gathered for the 2:30 jungle walk after a lunch which some found too greasy.

Our guide, Fernando, wore knee-length shorts and T-shirt and carried a fierce-looking machete (more for effect than necessity, I learned).

Each woman was handed a long, straight tree branch (for fending off wildcats and panthers?).

Actually, there were few wild animals in the forest. (Doughty had warned everyone not to expect East Africa.)

The tree branch was to help us balance on felled trees that serve as walkways in swampy areas.

For more than an hour we trudged single file through the steamy forest, sometimes stopping to observe a rare flower, a large anthill or a termite nest in a tree.

The heat was deceiving. Body temperatures didn't seem to be so high, yet perspiration poured from our foreheads and necks.

Our destination was a ceremonial site of the Bora tribe.

Fernando gave a hoot announcing our approach. A faint answer came from the dense, green forest.

We walked into a clearing where about 25 Indians awaited us. The men were smiling; the women watched us with curiosity. Meanwhile, the children were playing, some of them in a flirting fashion with members of our group.

Except for the naked two and three-year-olds, all were dressed in a dark fibre dyed in brown patterns, much like the tapa cloth of the South Pacific.

Benches had been placed along one end of the clearing where we watched the Indians dance to the tune of their own singsong. It was mostly a shuffling of feet. As they danced, the wife of the young chief was nursing her baby.

With the show over, the Indians gathered to sell us beads, blowguns, darts and slices of their decorated tree bark.

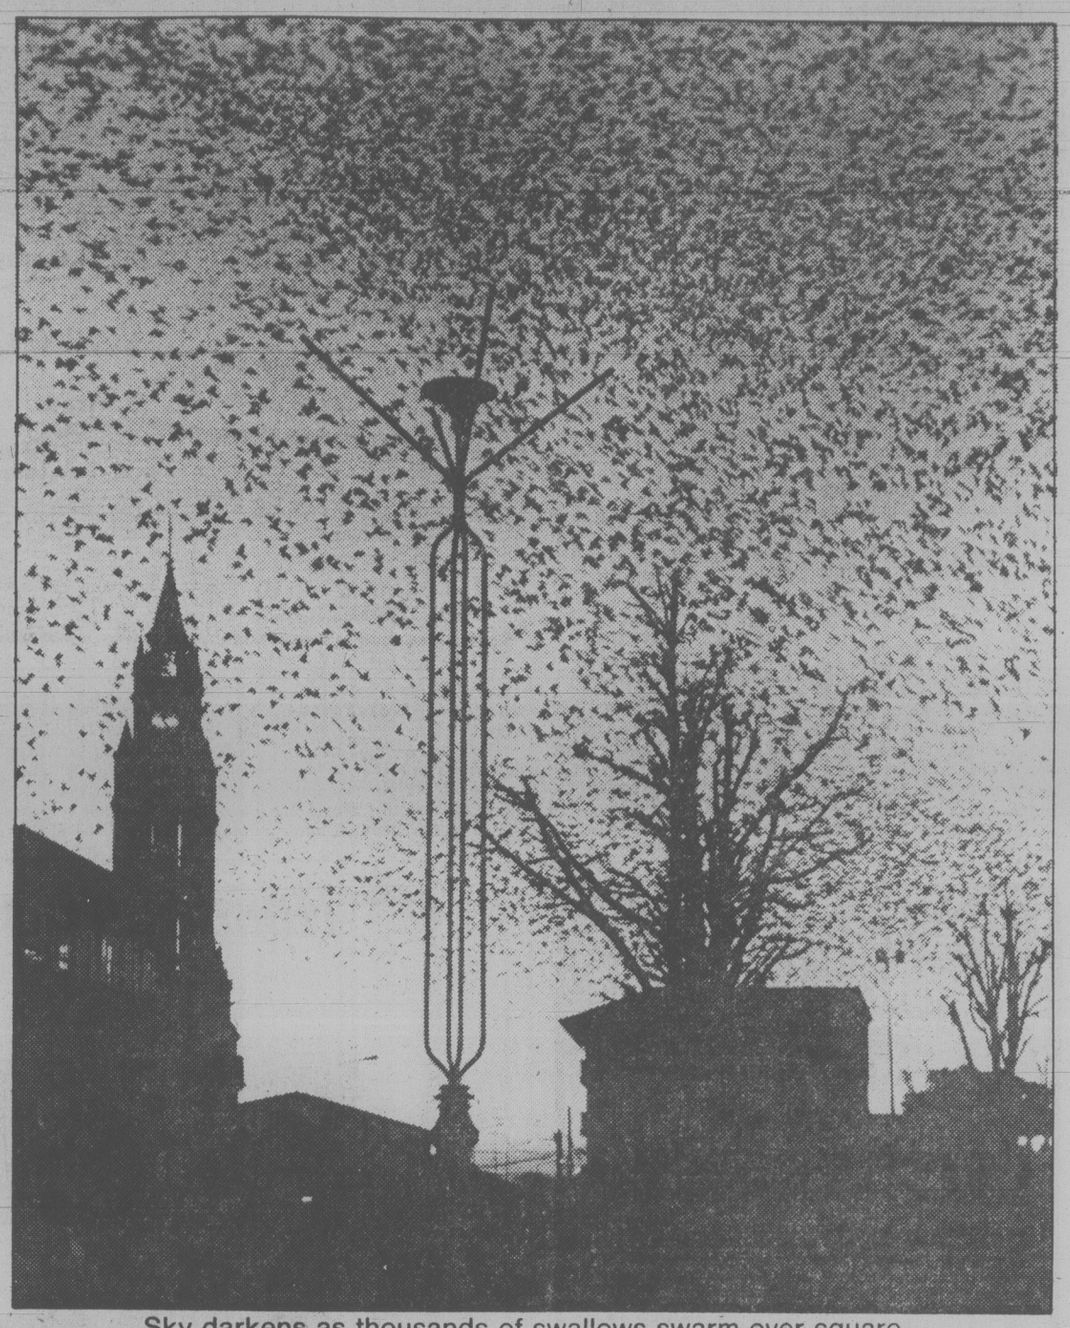

One of our group had balloons and candy, which the guide distributed. And while this flurried activity took place, an old woman sidled up to me and pointed to her lips, then to mine. I opened my purse and gave her a tube of lipstick.

Now laden with beads and blowguns, we began our return to the safari camp, taking a mostly different route.

A few minutes after five o'clock we reached the camp and hurried along for showers and fresh clothing.

After dinner, and shortly before 11, the weariness caused by the heat and activity of the day took its toll. We carried kerosene lamps to our rooms, bolted the doors and dressed for bed.

Then welcome sleep came at the head of the world's mightiest river.

Even time takes holiday under the Molokai sun

By DAVID BUTWIN

MOLOKAI, Hawaii—Nothing ever changes on Molokai. There are no traffic lights, the beaches are almost empty and the little Kanemitsu bakery in Kaunakakai still turns out the biggest—or at least the best—selection of cookies and breads in the mid-Pacific.

That is the kind of progress report one always could count on making from Molokai. But in 1979—20 years since statehood and two years since the Sheraton-Molokai arrived—it doesn't quite tell the story.

I should add that the airport now has a control tower, there is a small game park on the west end of the island, and the 290-room Sheraton has made an unobtrusive debut. As I said, nothing's new.

You can cross the 20-mile Molokai Channel in no time aboard the jets of Hawaiian Air or Aloha Air Lines, but I chose the slower (20 minutes), more scenic delivery with Royal Hawaiian Air Service, an all-Cessna fleet that serves some of the remotest corners of the state. Half an hour after landing I was pulling up to the Sheraton on the western tip of the island, certain I never had seen this rolling, semi-arid, sunny region and yet somehow haunted with its familiarity.

Before lunch I explored Kepuhi Beach, about 75 yards down a sloping lawn from my room, and marvelled once again at Hawaii's ability to spread such distinctly different beaches at one's feet. This one was hot, brown, soft underfoot, with a furious shore break that spilled over black and rust-colored boulders. Where had I seen it before?

At lunch in the hotel's Ohia Lodge, an open-air building that resembles the traditional Hawaiian hale (or house), I mentioned to a Hawaii friend that years ago, in August of 1967, I had taken Army Reserve summer training on Molokai. I still remembered the heat and dust, and the difficulty that the Regular Army 11th Brigade—young soldiers in their last training exercise before shipping out to Vietnam—encountered trying to come ashore and wrest the island from us reservists.

"I can still see the red dust and that gorgeous endless beach," I said, "but we were encamped so far from civilization and the exercise was so draining I've never been able to pinpoint exactly where on Molokai we were."

"You were right here," my friend said. "That 'endless beach' is right next door, along the fourth fairway of the new golf course. I know because that was a big event for Molokai. The 11th Brigade had trouble getting ashore in the rough surf, and a couple of landing craft broke up. If you don't believe me, take a close look at the beach. There are still remains of the huge mats the Army used to send vehicles onto the beach."

Half an hour later I took a strange, sentimental journey in a motorized cart across the golf course. Papohaku Beach is much like the sandy stretch in front of the hotel, but longer and more desolate. Even though it's hard by the fourth fairway, a dense thicket of the mesquite-like keawe trees separates the hot sand from the manicured lawn. There was a family—a young mother and father and their infant child—testing the relentless surf. Otherwise the beach was empty for miles. Far back from the shore I found the evidence: the weathered, twisted mats my friend had spoken of, the last sign of Exercise Coral Sands, 1967.

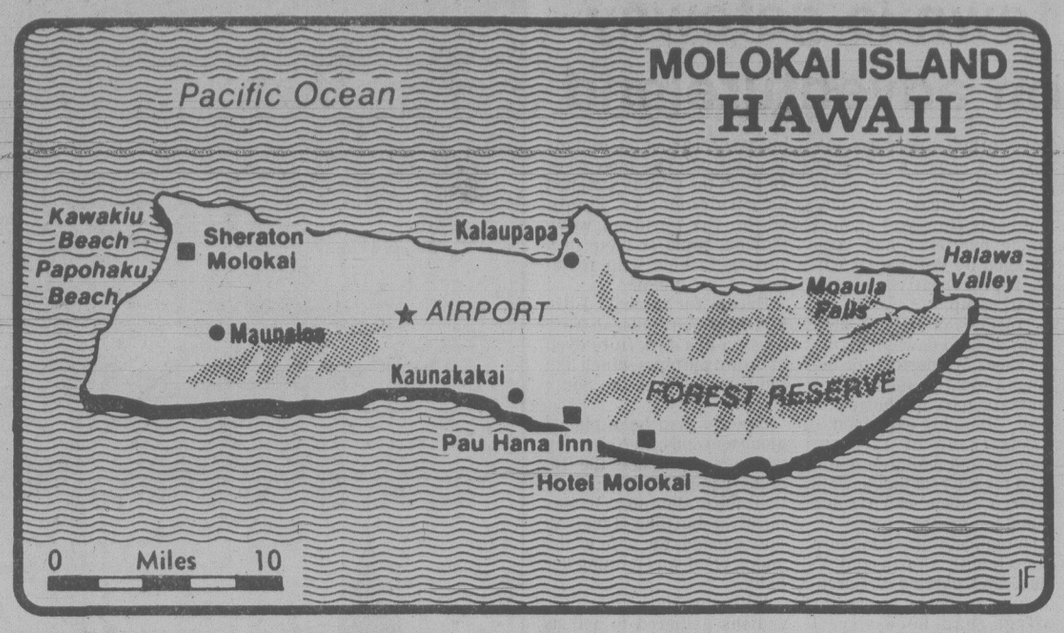

I didn't retrace all my steps on Molokai because there wasn't time. On another visit I had ridden a mule down a switchback trail along a 2,000-foot cliff, an exercise that was even more harrowing than Coral Sands. Tropical Rent a Mule still is an everyday Molokai operation, and the $36 charge includes the mule ride, a picnic lunch and a tour of the Kalaupapa leper colony on a flat, lava tableland at the base of the cliff.

Everyone's favorite scenic trek is the long drive to Halawa Valley on Molokai's dramatic northeast coast, a sacred, hidden place of thundering waterfalls and deeply cleaved green valleys. I have heard claims that this is the loveliest and most stunning scenery in the Hawaiian Islands, though there are many supporters of Kauai's Napali coast and the parade of valleys beyond Honokaa on the Big Island.

For easy going, country crossroads towns, it is hard to top Kaunakakai, the capital of Molokai. Red corrugated-iron eaves shade both sides of the main street. Among the chief landmarks are the G. Pascua Store with its bags of mush poi and packets of preserved Chinese fruits, the Oviedo lunch counter, and of course Kanemitsu's Bakery.

The bakery does a brisk breakfast business, but on a sleepy afternoon Mrs. Dorothy Kanemitsu, the third-generation owner, has time to tell you about the onion cheese, grain wheat and Molokai raisin bread she ships to Oahu and Maui hotels and the sundry cookies ("no preservatives") that every Molokai kid loves. She even gave this kid a batch of free samples.

I haven't told about the game park of Molokai's two other hotels, the small, totally relaxed and inexpensive (as low as $20) Pau Hana and the Hotel Molokai, nor have I said much about the island's biggest asset—its people—nor about the view at night from the Sheraton-Molokai. In the distance are the glimmering lights of Honolulu, and that's about as close as I wanted that other world to be.

Pint-size bellhop Jonny Ferguson cuts celebration cake

Grand old lady hostess for 35 million guests

By DIANE WAYDA

TORONTO (CP) — Her 50-year history reads like a chronicle of a day in the lives of kings, queens, scoundrels and thieves who have bedded down with her.

They were but a few of the more than 35 million guests who have swung through the revolving doors of the Royal York Hotel during the last half century.

And their comings and goings have filled the grand, old limestone lady with memories not only of pomp and tradition, but of scandal and humor as well.

"A city within a city reaches the zenith of human achievement," was the way a Toronto Star editorial marked the hotel's birth on the eve of the Great Depression.

Newspapers recorded her triumphs and tragedies in the years that followed as the eccentric and the straight-laced played out a portion of their lives beneath the hand-carved moldings and hand-painted scroll work of her ceilings.

The 27-storey hotel officially opened June 11, 1929, when Gov.-Gen. Viscount Willingdon scrawled his name in the hotel's register and joined 2,000 guests at a gala opening ball.

They danced to the strains of the big band sound of Ben Bernie's Orchestra after hotel management had presented them with 1,200 gold pencils, beauty compacts and pairs of cuff links bearing the Royal York insignia.

But management's efforts to buy off souvenir hunters in advance failed—other mementoes, including all the crystal goblets, were missing next morning.

The 50th anniversary of Canadian Pacific Ltd.'s flagship hotel was marked by a vice-regal celebration Friday.

About 1,000 guests attended at $150 a head, and as an anniversary gift the hotel donated the ticket price to the Hospital for Sick Children and the Canadian commission for the International Year of the Child.

It's a far cry from the Depression days when the Royal York kept its doors open while staff lived off tips and management roamed the streets looking for guests to fill the house.

It wasn't without its paradoxical moments. During the peak of the Depression, a millionaire contractor took philanthropic delight in scattering $1 bills from the hotel's main balcony.

Service was the key word as employees were strictly trained and regulations enforced in a manner reminiscent of the military.

Their reward was meeting with the world's elite as well as its characters.

"Bellmen were goodwill ambassadors in the old days," recalls John (Jack) James, who's been with the Royal York for 45 years.

"We always knew where to find a bootlegger, took guests on tours of the hotel and city and could find food at any time of the night.

"It's changed now, of course, but it's still a fascinating job to be in."

Other events added to the adventure and romance of the hotel once billed as the tallest building in the British Empire. It still remains the largest hotel in the Commonwealth.

An unshaven, tired and shivering John Labatt, scion of the brewing family, staggered through the revolving doors one cold night in 1934—to be joyously greeted by his brother, Hugh, who had waited anxiously in the hotel for news of John's three-day kidnapping ordeal.

The war years arrived and the hotel became home to many from Britain, including Lord and Lady Dunhill.

"They were the loveliest people to know," former cashier Betty Craik remembers. "She used to come downstairs every now and then to look at her jewels in the vault.

"She just wanted to caress her diamonds, emeralds and sapphires. She loved them. She had no social life in Toronto—where would she wear her tiaras?"

The Royal York also played a part on the tragic night of Sept. 7, 1949, when the city's skyline glowed from flames that engulfed the cruise ship Noronic while it was docked in Toronto harbor.

That night, 118 people lost their lives. Many of the survivors, dazed and bleeding, made their way to the Royal York where staff turned the lobby into a field hospital and some guests gave up their rooms to the victims.

Tragedy struck again in 1975 when an assistant credit manager was fatally shot and a Metro policeman wounded by a wanted criminal from the United States.

Hotel employees have watched as men stepped out on their wives, as rooms filled with liquor during prohibition years and as poker games depleted the fortunes of some.

They've also watched the great and the not-so-great come and go—Queen Elizabeth, Prince Philip, Prince Charles, other members of the royal family, prime ministers and cabinet ministers.

And, of course, those from the entertainment world who either performed in the renowned Imperial Room or stayed at the hotel, among them Sammy Davis Jr., Red Skelton, Jack Benny, Al Jolson, Sonny Bono, Bob Hope, Nelson Eddy.

Built at an original cost of $16 million, a $15-million addition in 1959 brought the room total up to 1,600.

The hotel, with sleeping accommodation for 2,650, can handle 10,000 people at one meal sitting.

The Royal York's 4,700 windows look out on a Toronto skyline that has changed drastically since 1929 when the grand, old lady's birth was hailed as the beginning of a new era for Canada.

Inflation and fuel hikes blamed for higher fares

But demand still likely to be high

Sea cruise fares soar 15 per cent

By MURRAY J. BROWN

Blame it on higher fuel costs and soaring inflation, but North Americans will be paying more to go down to the sea in cruise ships in 1980.

Most cruise lines have been holding the 1979 price line despite the 1-2 economic punch, although some added a $5 to $10 daily fuel surcharge per passenger to help cushion the blow.

Almost all of the lines already have announced the surcharges will be dropped and anticipated increases in the cost of fuel will be included in the 1980 rates. Some are planning to cut back on the number of ports and shorten itineraries to conserve energy and help keep prices down.

But trade sources estimate that rates will go up from about 15 per cent to about 30 per cent, to a daily average of about $135 per person sharing a moderately priced stateroom.

The cruise industry, however, expects that space will still be tight while demand will continue to run high and recommends early booking, particularly for the lower-priced cabins on the popular seven-to-14-day Caribbean cruises.

Even the most ardent landlubber would have to admit there are few better ways to escape the hectic pace of modern living than taking off on a leisurely sea voyage.

And you do not have to pack or unpack during your travels, no matter how many stops along the way. You don't have to worry about plane, train or bus timetables. And you don't have to wonder where to eat and sleep.

Generally, there is only one class on cruise ships and passengers usually eat in the same dining rooms, drink at the same bars and enjoy the same entertainment, public rooms and recreational facilities regardless of what they paid for their passage.

Another plus is that the cruise passenger has a pretty good idea of what his vacation will cost even before boarding ship. The rate includes accommodation, meals, entertainment, transport at sea, port taxes and other basic requirements. Not included are bar bills, shopping, tipping, laundry and other personal expenses. Shore excursions also cost, extra unless specifically included in the contract of passage.

About 85 ships flying the flags of 26 shiplines—including the Soviet hammer-and-sickle—compete in the lucrative North American cruise market. In 1978, they hosted an estimated 1.2 million American vacationists seeking relaxation, fun in the sun, or the adventure of visiting exotic places with strange-sounding names.

Current listings range from one-port three-day cruises from Florida ports to the Bahamas for as low as $170 per person double to round-the-world voyages of up to 100 days from about $11,700 per person double.

Itineraries from East, West, Gulf and Caribbean ports include hundreds of destinations in the West Indies, Mediterranean, Bermuda and the Bahamas, Mexico and Central America, Alaska and South America, Africa and Australia, the Black Sea and the North Sea, the Middle East and the Far East, and the South Pacific.

There are cruises to fit almost every interest and budget.

If you have the time and money, Holland America's Rotterdam leaves New York Jan. 9 for a 27-port—including Havana—100-day-round-the-world cruise (from about $9,800). Also from New York, Jan. 17, the Queen Elizabeth 2 sails on a 27-port 80-day voyage which will include the Panama and Suez Canals (from about $9,950.)

The Royal Viking Sea leaves Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., Jan. 12 for 23-port 87-day cruise, which also includes the two canals and stops in Egypt and Israel (from about $11,660). On Jan. 19, Norwegian America's Sagafjord departs Port Everglades, Fla., for a 29-port 92-day global cruise including a call at Whampoa, China ($10,580).

Sailing from Los Angeles Feb. 12—with a stop at San Francisco—the Royal Viking Sky makes a 17-port 70-day voyage which includes a stop at Shanghai (from about $9,400).

For those with less time and money, there are literally hundreds of cruises to choose from, from overnight runs to the Bahamas to months-long voyages to Tahiti, Bali and other storied islands of the South Seas, among others.

Six popular cruise ships schedule regular services from New York to Bermuda, the Bahamas and the Caribbean during the fall-winter season, including the QE2, Rotterdam, Statendam, Volendam, Oceanic and Doric. About a score of cruise ships based in Miami offer cruises of three to 14 days and more, including a 19-day gourmet cruise by the MS Meroz to Toulon, France. Seven ships will sail out of Port Everglades and Fort Lauderdale, including Sitmar's Fairwind which offers four 14-day cruises to Acapulco, Mexico, via the Panama Canal.

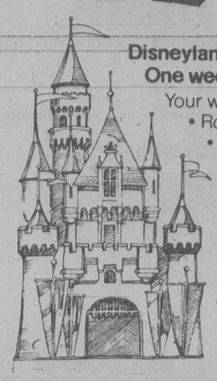

Incidentally, Norwegian Caribbean's SS Norway, the former SS France, will make its debut in Caribbean cruise service in 1980 after a multi-million dollar facelift.

About a dozen shiplines operate out of Los Angeles and San Francisco, on cruises to Alaska, Mexico, the Caribbean, Central and South America, Asia and the South Pacific, including Sitmar and the Princess Line. The refitted S.S. United States is expected to begin cruise service in the Pacific sometime in 1980.

Cruise ships also sail from New Orleans, Galveston, Tampa, Boston, Norfolk, and San Juan, Puerto Rico, in addition to other port cities.

AROUND THE WORLD with Stan Delaplane

If you remember when the Big Bands played at the grand casino, and the sea made hush-a-bye music on the sands—I Left My Love In Avalon—Santa Catalina Island is your cup of teary nostalgia.

I used up a pocketful of Kleenex on the boat to Catalina.

The Big White Steamer that rocked us from reality to Paradise is gone.

We go over now on a fleet of trim, three-deck ships. Five trips a day in the summer. Three a day now. Catalina Island has become a year-round resort.

Avalon—(2,000 residents)—gets half a million day-trippers, overnighters and weekenders a year.

The boat trip takes an hour and three-quarters. Round-trip, $12. There's a bar and snack bar. The channel is usually smooth.

William Wrigley, Jr.—(chewing gum, double your pleasure, double your fun) —bought the island. Passed it along to son, P. K. It's now administered by Los Angeles Park and Recreation.

The Wrigley family held onto 60 per cent of the city of Avalon and 14 per cent of the island. Their Santa Catalina Island Co. runs tour buses, a three-and-a-half-hours jolting ride through the interior.

It's worth it. In 1924, a silent movie company brought over 16 buffalo to make a picture The Vanishing Americans.

The company and the Americans vanished. They left the buffalo.

"There's now a herd of more than 500," said Ron Lara who drove me.

I came to Avalon once, but not to dance. Catalina was taken over by the military. Bill Donovan's hush-hush OSS was training here. There was a huge camp of trainees for the merchant marine.

Reluctant civilians being turned into seamen.

Avalon will surprise you. I expected a boardwalk thing—rides, pinball machines, jukeboxes and beer.

It's none of that. Though Lara said: "On the Fourth of July we had 35,000 people!"

It's a clean little town. True, the beach is the size of a table cloth. But the beach street is closed to traffic. And everybody saunters down the middle of the road in the warm sun. Bathing suits and jeans are the all-day dress.

Very good restaurants. And inexpensive. Dinner with drinks about $12. Breakfast, $3.50. Plenty of small hotels at $25 average.

There's a helpful Visitors' Bureau.

Avalon is run by Mayor Bud Smith, a United Airlines pilot.

"He flies over to L.A. airport in his own small plane. Takes his United flight out and back. Then flies home to Catalina.

What's wrong with it? The inland bus ride climbs straight up from the beach to the airport at 1,602 feet. Riding in the cab you look straight down as the driver goes to the edge of the cliffs. Swings the interlocked bus (two sections) around the bend.

(Close your eyes. Look the other way and whistle I Left My Heart in Avalon.)

Folders with prices are attractive and free. Write Catalina Chamber of Commerce, Avalon, CA 90704. make it attention Tim Mazur. He seemed like a chap who gets things done. (Don't forget to bring your heart.)

Charming Inveraray Castle in Scottish Highlands is on visit list

ON THE GO
with Jerry Hulse

LONDON — Don't take a chance, take a guide.

If that sounds like some pitchman's play for customers, well, in a sense it is.

Only, Fred Pearson is far too refined to be identified with carnivals or street hawkers. After all, he's an Oxford graduate, one of those proper British gentlemen you read about in the mystery novels. It's just that he came up with this particular slogan—"Don't take a chance, take a guide." And it fits.

Take-A-Guide is the name of his company, and that's exactly what his business is all about—guiding visitors about Britain as well as the Continent.

SO IF YOU'RE tired of the museum and cathedral circuit, ring up Take-A-Guide. Forty-four-year-old Fred Pearson believes travel should involve much more than blisters, bunions and dull lectures.

A while back he arranged for visitors to sip champagne with the Duchess of Argyle. And frequently he tosses parties for clients in his apartment in Belgravia, the guest list running from vacationers in from Roanoke to a cousin of the queen.

IF THERE is a method school for learning all there is to know about Britain, it is Take-A-Guide. Whatever the question, Pearson's guides will provide the answer.

You can hire a guide and a car for a few hours or an entire month. It's your choice. TAG picks you up at your hotel and spirits you off to see the sights.

One may dine at the Pett Bottom near Canterbury or stop for cocktails at Popjoy's in Bath. The cheapest tour (a half day's spin around London) comes to $51 for four persons, including that nuisance, the Value Added Tax. The most expensive service on the books involves a six-passenger limousine and guide at $355 a day.

IT GOES WITHOUT saying that Pearson's productions don't come cheap.

On the other hand, few persons in all Britain are better qualified to tell the tourist where to get off.

Pearson's guides are put to tests that would give migraines to Oxford's brightest undergraduate. They must know Britain better nearly than the queen herself.

Take-A-Guide's tours go by way of the Thames Valley, Oxford and Blenheim, Cambridge and Hatfield, Brighton, Canterbury, Shakespeare country, Stonehenge, the Cotswolds and Ely, Dover and Rye, Longleat, etc.

A SEVEN-DAY tour entitled "The Heart of England" takes in King Arthur's Round Table, Winchester Cathedral, Stonehenge, Stratford, Warwick Castle, Coventry Cathedral, Ludlow Castle, Chester, the Lake District, York, Lincoln and Cambridge.

Pearson also provides tours of Scotland and Wales, Ireland, Paris, Normandy and the Loire Valley. TAG leads other visitors through Germany, Austria and on into Italy.

TAG also specializes in "Legal London," "Junior's London" (for youngsters), "Jewish London," "Doctor's London," "Shopping in London" and "London at Night."

AND FREQUENTLY the weirdies show up. Like the chap who insisted that the guide keep the speed down to 12 m.p.h. And then there was the American visitor who demanded to be shown nothing but camellias.

"Wouldn't you like to see a castle, too?" asked Pearson. The man flushed. "No, dammit, I came to Britain to see camellias. Nothing else!"

"One castle?"

"No!"

For the following three weeks client and guide covered the camellia circuit from one end of Britain to the other.

TAG's trickiest request came from a clairvoyant. She told Pearson she wanted to be where the vibes were best. The locations were left up to him.

UNDAUNTED, Pearson chose at random. As for the client, he was to ring her up shortly after seven o'clock each morning.

"Why seven o'clock?" he asked innocently.

Perturbed, she said, "Because I get visions at seven o'clock"

Pearson was sure the lady was a bit bonkers, but it worked out well. Madame discerned visions unseen by others. Indeed, she went home happy after catching sight of Anne Boleyn. It didn't matter that this bride of King Henry VIII's was beheaded in 1536. The lady from Witchita Falls saw her riding by in her coach and that was that.

ANOTHER WOMAN requested a tailor-made tour of Florence Nightingale's old haunts. Pearson responded by sending her off to the hospital where the famed nurse trained, as well as to her country home. His youngest client was a tyke who took off his clothing in an elegant London restaurant one evening. His oldest was 100.

Pearson's own grandmother calls on TAG whenever she wishes to take her nieces and nephews on afternoon outings.

Two American librarians with a passion for parish churches return each year to continue where they left off the year before. Churches and more churches. Like the man on the camellia kick, they aren't interested in anything else.

PEARSON HAS a virtual harem at his fingertips. Of 110 guides, 60 percent are female, ages 22 to 35.

In deference to clients, TAG's guides are forbidden to smoke unless invited to do so by the client, and then only after meals.

Fred Pearson got his start in travel while still a student at Oxford. On campus, he ran across a Dallas banker and his wife who'd missed their bus back to London, invited them home for tea and later drove them to their hotel—a 60-mile jaunt.

Afterward he found a note and a $20 bill in his pocket. The note from the American couple thanked him and asked: "Why don't you do this for a living?"

IT WAS LIKELY, Pearson decided, that there is more money in tourism than accounting, a profession he was prepared to follow.

Note: For brochures, write to Pearson, c-o Take-A-Guide, 85 Lower Sloane St., London S. W. 1, England.

Developers find profit in heritage preservation

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Heritage preservation is no longer the exclusive activity of long-haired radicals and little old ladies.

It's now a profitable business that is attracting developers with neat haircuts in three-piece suits who have firm lines of credit at the bank.

"I wear the handle of developer," Glen Wood of London, Ont. told the annual convention of Heritage Canada on Friday.

"He's thought of in some circles as a two-faced monster, but most of us are not quite so bad."

Wood, Winnipeg developer Don McGillivray and Vancouver architect Barry Downs delivered the message that conserving old buildings is not only culturally desirable but more importantly, makes economic sense.

And Jim Knight, associate director of Heritage Canada, said heritage preservation is going to be the big growth industry of the 1980s, increasing by several billion dollars a year.

"There's a tremendous interst on the part of builders in an economy that's slowing down and buildings are wearing out."

With derelict buildings are neglected areas of cities, "it's an entrepreneur who's going to turn it into something exciting," said Knight.

Most heritage preservation is being carried out by the private sector these days, said Wood, and it would be more helpful for heritage groups to suggest alternative uses for old buildings that are economically workable "rather than throwing themselves in front of bulldozers."

"We can only support so many museums in this country."

If heritage buildings are to be preserved for the future, then they will have to be adapted to retail and office space, said Wood.

He is responsible for the Festival Square project in Stratford, Ont. which preserved the original facades of two century-old brick buildings, but transformed the interiors into shops, restaurants, a pub and a bank.

"Heritage conservation does make good dolars and sense."

McGillivray, described as a major force in the current movement to preserve Winnipeg's old warehouse district, said flatly: "Heritage is good business."

"Heritage is good for the community. Heritage is good for the country."

He agreed that the private sector is going to be the most influential group in heritage work, but said that private developers find it frustrating in many ways.

The insurance industry is skeptical — adjusters charge higher rates for insuring older renovated buildings. The tax laws make it more desirable sometimes for the owner to demolish his rundown building than to sell it for a renovation project.

Modern building, electrical and fire codes are hard to meet in old buildings, and the inspectors who enforce them give differing individual interpretations of what must be done to make a building safe.

Downs, whose firm has done the renovations on the old Carnegie library in Vancouver and other preservation jobs, noted the resurgence of interest in preserving and recycling historic architecture. The reasons are diverse.

"Sentiment, nostalgia. I sense a new romanticism afoot perhaps. There's concern about the social and psychological effects of urban renewal. Change and development have taken their toll," he said.

He also provided some hard evidence that preserving and renovating an old building is actually cheaper than erecting a new one.

The U.S. Heritage Trust has worked out formulas for comparing all the costs involved — including the energy and time required to produce the building materials for the new structure as well as the money to erect it.

With heightened interest in energy conservation, it makes sense to keep older buildings in place. He said a third of all energy used in the U.S. goes into buildings, either to keep them operating or to produce the construction materials in the first place.

An energy audit of an old brick hotel in the Pioneer Square area of Seattle using the formulas determined that renovating and making it offices and shops instead of demolishing it and building anew saved the equivalent of 700,000 gallons of gasoline.

Considering one brick to be equivalent to one gallon, the renovation project provided enough savings to offset the costs of maintaining the less energy-efficient old building for 200 years.

New top spot for Tommy D.

Former NDP leader Tommy Douglas was elected by acclamation Friday to the board of governors of Heritage Canada, the national charitable foundation concerned with heritage preservation.

Douglas, 75, formerly MP for Nanaimo and premier of Saskatchewan, was joined [illegible] University of Victoria professor Martin Segger, a cultural historian and an expert in urban preservation.

To all guys buying or selling boats to use the Trading Centre call the broker or office nearest to you. We will come over and do an evaluation survey. Fill out a specification sheet then your boat goes on the board. If a boat is priced right it usually goes the same day. If you're looking for a new boat get your requirements listed on the buyers board. You will be called when a suitable boat comes up. The Trading Centre has been designed to ease the chore of buying or selling a boat. We have interim finance plans to get around the problem of no financing for "A" licenses. Our company lawyers are specialists re: fishery or License regulation problems. These are some of the advantages of using the Trading Centre.

CONTRACTORS and DEVELOPERS.

Why build when prices and interest rates are so high? Why not go for our 33 suites with only $80,000 cash required and interest rate on the balance of 10½%. This building has a vacancy rate that is minimal and has a new furnace and is partly furnished. Good views and close to shopping and convenient bus — ample parking and well equipped. Full price $519,000, less than $16,000 per apt., (compare that with the accelerating building costs today).

ALSO:
and for a little larger investment you can add this 4 plex to go with the above making a complex of 37 apts. on 4 lots. And this last only requires $20,000 cash and $75,000 mortgaging at 10½% — full price $95,000 (scarcely more than a duplex), owner anxious to retire only reason for selling. And the four-plex will have a new 20 year roof.

Mauna Kea: the brightest eye on the stars

By GEORGE ALEXANDER
Los Angeles Times

ATOP MAUNA KEA, Hawaii — This cold, windswept summit may not support vegetation, but it is an almost ideal base for a wide range of instruments through which astronomers can peer into the loftiest rafters of the universe.

Already "home" to four major and several minor astronomical facilities, this 13,760-foot-tall volcanic mountain in the middle of the Pacific recently officially gained another first-class instrument: a 144-inch diameter telescope to be operated jointly by the National Research Council of Canada, the national Center for Scientific Research of France and the University of Hawaii.

Canada and France supplied the money — $30 million — for the design and construction of the new telescope while the University of Hawaii made available a site on state-owned land here. As a result, the use of the instrument will be apportioned 42.5 percent each to Canada and France and 15 percent to the University of Hawaii.

It is expected the astronomers of those nations and the university will make most of the observations in their allotted times, but some opportunities will be made available to scientists from other nations.

The new telescope is designed to operate in the visible, infrared and ultraviolet parts of the spectrum, capturing on photographic plates and other recording systems the light and heat given off by stars, galaxies and other celestial objects billions of years ago.

So distant are those objects their radiation is just now falling on the earth. "In the Milky Way, our galaxy," said Professor Charles Fehrenbach, the French astronomer serving as the present chairman of the joint board of directors, "we must study gamma-ray and X-ray sources, infrared and super-dense stars like white dwarfs, pulsars, neutrons stars and black holes. But the biggest share of observing time should be reserved for the study of galaxies, those universes similar to our own."

This joint project began in the late 1960s when France and Canada were pondering separate observatories. Each nation was hindered, however, by two problems: Lack of a suitable site and a shortage of funds.

In the early 1970s, the money problem led the two nations to agree to merge their efforts into a single telescope that both could use. That question resolved, they began to search for a suitable mountaintop on which to put it. That search led them here to Mauna Kea, the long dormant volcanic mountain on the island of Hawaii, the biggest and southernmost island in the Hawaiian chain.

The tripartite agreement was signed in October, 1973, and construction began in the cold thin air of the mountaintop the following year.

The new Canadian-French-Hawaiian telescope, which was dedicated last month, joins several other astronomical instruments atop Mauna Kea. These are a 24-inch and 88-inch optical telescope of the University of Hawaii; a 150-inch infrared telescope of the United Kingdom; and a 120-inch infrared instrument of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The combined collecting area of all these instruments is greater than that of any other mountaintop observatory in the world, according to University of Hawaii officials.

It may grow greater. The National Radio Astronomy Observatory, which operates radio telescopes at several sites in the United States and Puerto Rico, is planning to erect an 80-foot dish antenna on Mauna Kea to collect millimeter waves (radio frequencies) from various celestial objects. And the University of California is considering placing a 10-meter (384-inch) optical telescope here in the 1980s.

Dedications like that here on Sept. 28 are ceremonial events that usually signify the construction and testing phases are over and the difficult task of whipping the complete system into a smooth-running facility is just the beginning.

Parts of this newest telescope were trucked up the mountainside in late 1978 and then assembled here through last summer. "First light," a milestone for any astronomical instrument that marks the initial passage of a star's photons through the array of mirrors, was recorded here last Aug. 7.

Since then, said Bruce Campbell, a University of Hawaii resident astronomer assigned to this joint project, teams of American, Canadian and French scientists and engineers have been painstakingly aligning those mirrors and carefully eliminating the "bugs" in the telescope's massive — and yet quite delicate — tracking mechanism.

Although it will be a year of more before the telescope realizes the picture-taking sharpness that its designers envisioned, many of the American and European astronomers gathered here for the dedication ceremony said they expect it to become one of the world's leading astronomical tools.

This status should come about, according to the scientists, as a result of several natural and two man-made factors.

Most important are the exceptional environmental conditions of Mauna Kea itself. Not only is the peak, at 13,760 feet, more than twice as high as the mountain on which the Palomar 200-inch-diameter telescope rests near San Diego, but it is a drier, clearer and darker (at night) vantage point to view the heavens than any other astronomical site.

Mauna Kea is drier because it pokes into the atmosphere well above the inversion layer at 6,000 to 7,000 feet where clouds form. Consequently, there is only one-tenth as much water vapor in the air directly above the mountain's summit as there is at the mountain's base. Since water vapor readily absorbs infrared radiation, and infrared is one of the more revealing kinds of radiation to be emitted by stars and galaxies, astronomers like to have as little water vapor as possible between their telescope and the object they are studying.

In addition, the cloud layer that usually forms well below the peak of Mauna Kea also serves to block the light from the nearby city of Hilo. When astronomers are trying to capture the faint light from a very distant star or galaxy, the last thing they want falling on their collecting mirror is stray photons from the streetlights, shopping centers and homes in a nearby community. This unwanted illumination is known as "light pollution."

Finally, the flow of air over Mauna Kea is usually so smooth and stable that atmosphere turbulence seldom develops. Turbulent air causes stars to appear to twinkle at most other places on the surface of the earth. Mauna Kea is both clear and dark for observational purposes.

One of the man-made factors in the significance of the new telescope is the efforts made by French, Canadian and American scientists to reduce turbulence inside its protective dome. Even small differences between the tempratures of the observatory structure and the ambient atmosphere will lead to convective air currents that would rise in front of the telescope.

These currents distort, if ever so slightly, the light coming from distant stars or galaxies, just as the hot air coming off a desert highway in the summer makes far-off objects seem to shimmer.

To prevent this the floor in the telescope building is kept throughout the day at the same temperature forecast for the air the following night. Refrigeration coils buried in the steel and concrete floor insure that nothing inside the observatory warms the air around the instrument at night and causes unwanted drafts.

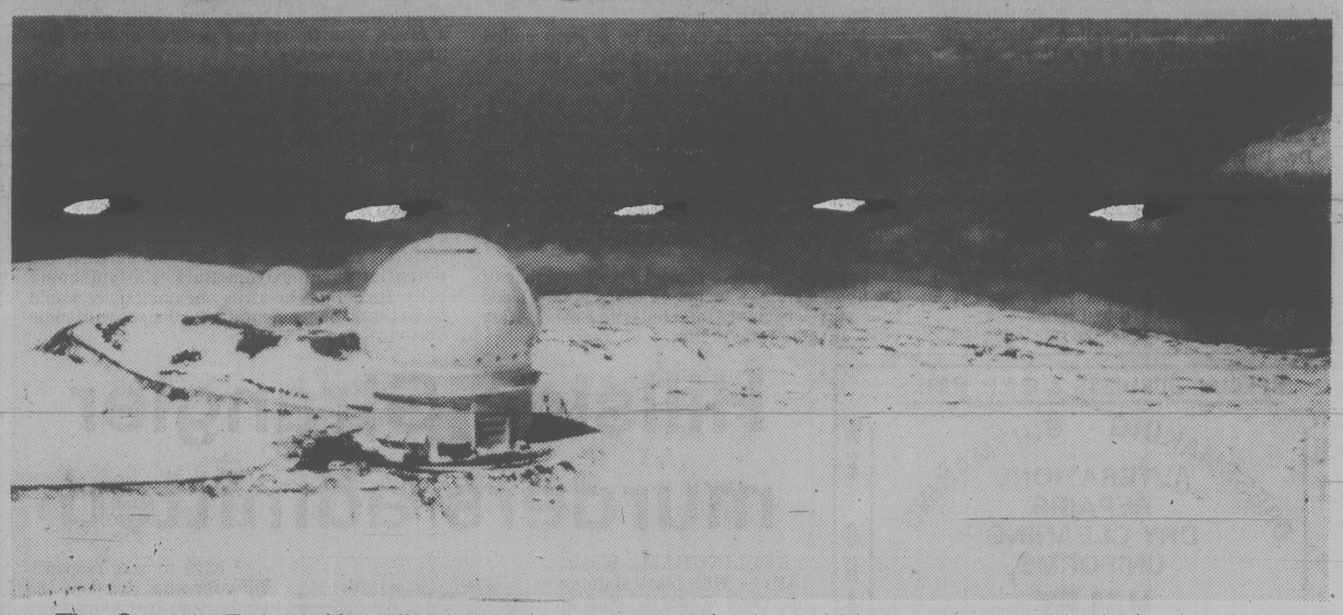

Finally, scientists have made efforts to reduce turbulence inside the telescope itself. Because it is difficult to catch the faint light coming from galaxies billions of light-years away (a light-year is the distance traveled by a 186,000-mile-per-second photon in a year and is equal to approximately six trillion miles), even small disturbances in the telescpe's optics can smear that image.

Consequently, the 140-inch diameter, two-foot thick, 14-ton blank for the primary mirror was cast by the Owens-Illinois Co. of Toledo, Ohio, from a newly developed ceramic material called Cer-Vit. This glass-like material expands and contracts very, very little under heating and cooling conditions and so experiences almost no deformation due to temperature changes.

Moreover, this new telescope has been designed to accept three different under-end rings, rather like a 35-mm camera equipped with several different lenses.

These rings are complex optical units that attach to the end of the telescope tube opposite that of the primary mirror. By switching from one to another, a task that requires anywhere from 30 minutes to several hours depending on the particular unit, astronomers can use the telescope to observe celestial objects' invisible light, infrared or ultraviolet.

They can also pass the captured radiation through a variety of special devices like photometers, polarimeters or spectrometers that analyze it in distinctive ways. From all this, the astronomers can deduce a great deal of information about the nature of the objects they are watching through the telescope.

The Canada-France-Hawaii telescope surmounts the top of Mauna Kea, an ideal viewing post

75% chance of spill every 20 years: report

OTTAWA (CP) — There is a 75 per cent probability of an oil spill from tankers every 20 years in the strait of Juan de Fuca if the U.S. goes ahead with a proposal to move Alaskan oil down Canada's west coast, a government study says.

The report, compiled by the Canadian Coast Guard ship safety branch, calculates the probable spill in such an accident would be 387 tons, with "considerable" impact on coastal population centres on Vancouver Island and the Lower Mainland of B.C.

Two years ago, a similar study was done on the Atlantic Coast ranking 19 ports, several in the U.S., in terms of risk of an oil tanker spill occuring and estimating the impact of such accidents.

It was done to illustrate the hazards faced in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by tanker traffic to a proposed oil refinery at Eastport, Me.

The West Coast study, using data supplied by several Canadian and U.S. departments and agencies, says there is a "significantly greater risk" of collision in the confined waters of Juan de Fuca Strait, from tankers carrying Alaskan oil, than at northern B.C. ports.

It says already heavy traffic and an abundance of fishing boats increase the risk.

The report stresses that the impact on Canadian population centres from oil spilled within the strait could be considerable.

The government says it is concerned about the environmental impact of increased tanker traffic on the West Coast and that it has made its views known to the U.S. government.

The issue has dominated the daily Commons question period this week in the wake of the decision by Foothills Oil Pipe Line Co to withdraw its application to build an overland route to carry Alaskan oil south to the lower 48 states.

The U.S. government is said to be leaning toward a proposal to move oil by tanker to Washington state before it is piped inland.

Meanwhile, at the National Energy Board hearing in Vancouver, a Canadian Coast Guard official said construction of an oil port at Low Point, west of Port Angeles, might require rearranging of shipping lanes in the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

M. A. Turner, in charge of vessel traffic management systems, told the hearing that anchoring terminals for such a port could interfere with shipping lanes agreed to by Canada and the United States.

The shipping lanes are part of a new vessel management system put into place in West Coast waters as a result of increasing traffic congestion and the increasing number of accidents in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and surrounding waters.

The system, developed jointly by the U.S. and Canadian coast guards, will eventually control all commercial shipping destined for Vancouver, Seattle and other ports in the area.

Turner said the shipping lanes might be affected by the single-point mooring buoys proposed for an oil port at Low Point because of the relatively narrow channel. Trans Mountain Pipeline Ltd. is proposing the port to handle Alaskan oil for shipment to the U.S. midwest.

The shipping channels now being used on a voluntary basis involve an outward-bound channel that swings close to the U.S. shoreline because of efforts to avoid fishing zones in the middle of the strait.

The proposed oil port at Low Point might interfere with that channel because it lies three kilometres offshore. Another 6½ kilometres would be required as safe clearance from the shipping channel, Turner said.

Turner said approval by the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization is needed to persuade ships from other countries to honor the lanes. A change in the lanes also would require approval by the organization.

Turner said hazards to ships entering the straits include dense fog, other ships and the congestion of fishing fleets. He estimates that as many as 400 fishing vessels congregate in the strait during the salmon fishing season.

Turner said proposals for tanker traffic from Valdez, Alaska, entering the strait would have them travelling no closer than 90 kilometres off Canada's West Coast.

They would make their turns for the Strait of Juan de Fuca about 160 kilometres offshore to avoid danger of collision.

The slump that wasn't puzzles U.S. experts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. recession that was feared to have begun in midsummer may not have occurred after all. Federal government figures released Friday showed a rebound in economic growth to an annual rate of 2.4 per cent.

Consumer buying received a large share of the credit for the boost to the economy, although purchases came at the expense of savings, which fell to a 28-year low of 4.1 per cent of income.

The rate of inflation as measured by the gross national product stayed about the same in the third quarter, as prices advanced at an annual rate of 9.6 per cent, the federal commerce department said. An annual rate is the increase if the quarterly results were to continue for an entire year.

The 2.4-per-cent rate of economic growth — as measured by the GNP — offset a second quarter rate of decline of 2.3 per cent. It crossed up many government and private forecasters who had flatly declared the economy was in a recession.

"These things are hard to predict," said Courtenay Slater, the commerce department's chief economist who was among those who had thought the third quarter would show another decline. The economy grew at a 1.1 per cent rate in the first quarter.

White House spokesman Jody Powell said the figures showed the economy "is perhaps stronger and more resilient than many had expected." He added they confirm that fighting inflation must be the primary economic concern.

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, who had gone so far recently as to say the U.S. not only was in a recession, but that the recession was half over, said Americans should not be misled into thinking a period of economic growth lies ahead.

"We expect the economy to return to slow or negative growth in the next few quarters," he said.

The conventional definition of a recession is two consecutive quarters of decline in the GNP, which is the value of the total output of goods and services in the economy.

But the final judgment is up to the National Bureau of Economic Research in Cambridge, Mass., which conceivably could conclude a recession had occurred even with the third quarter rebound.

A bureau committee will meet on Oct. 25 to consider the matter, but a spokesman said Friday it is unlikely to make a decision for another few months because recent economic statistics are inconclusive.

The 2.4-per-cent increase in GNP, the gain after discounting for inflation, was surprisingly large. However, Ms. Slater said the economy still shows "many of the symptoms of a recession."

"On balance, there has been no real growth in the economy for the last six months," Ms. Slater told reporters. "The events through which we are passing in this period of economic weakness may after the fact be judged a recession . . . although a weak recession."

But Lyle Gramley, a member of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said, "We may well avoid a recession in the technical sense."

Car slams into ambulance

City police have charged a 21-year-old man with impaired driving, failing to remain at the scene of an accident, and dangerous driving after a car collided with an ambulance in the 2700-block Douglas at about 11 p.m. Friday.

Police said the car sped off and the ambulance, driven by Geoff Waygood, gave chase.

The car slid into a brick wall at Finlayson, bounced off and continued along Alpha, Burnside, Harriet and Regina where it ran into a pole.

In other police matters, a 24-year-old man was charged with an early morning break-in at Universal Trading at 584 Johnson.

Officers patrolling the area shortly before 3 a.m. discovered a display window in the store had been smashed and spotted the suspect walking down the street.

Police caught a 26-year-old man in the act of trying to break into Metro Electronics, 719 Quadra.

Police said a silent alarm was triggered at 11:25 p.m. Officers found the suspect standing in the doorway with a screwdriver in his hands.

Knight to run for Saanich seat

Saanich Greenbelt Association president Hal Knight has announced he will seek a seat on Saanich council in the Nov. 17 municipal election.

The former school board chairman said citizens should play a larger role in the planning process.

The public hearing process is biased in favor of developers, he said, because citizens are usually the last the be informed about a rezoning application and have little time to prepare briefs.

Knight says the proposed Broadmead shopping centre is "totally unnecessary." A revised version of the shopping centre is exlpected to come to a vote next year.

Knight is a management consultant to business and government. He is former chairman of the Camosun College Board as well as serving on the Greater Victoria School Board.

He will be seeking one of four two-year terms on council. Expiring are the terms of Geoffrey Vantreight, Howard Sturrock, Fred Severson and David Paterson.

Severson and Paterson have announced they are not seeking re-election.

Declared candidates are Knight, former alderman Ian Cass and Muriel Overgaard, who was an NDP candidate in the last provincial election.

Rolls affair for Cadillac

LOS ANGELES (Reuter) — Princess Margaret drove up to open a Rolls Royce service garage Friday night — in a U.S. Cadillac.

A security official explained they had asked Margaret to travel in the Cadillac, which is used by police to shepherd important people round Los Angeles, because it is bullet-proof.

Security precautions have been stepped up for the princess in the wake of a remark attributed her at a Chicago dinner party last Saturday describing the Irish as pigs. Margaret's private secretary, Lord Napier, has said the princess has denied making such a remark.

Bush fires flare up despite drenching rain

Saanich firemen thought they were back in the middle of summer overnight when they received two reports of bush fires.

The first came in shortly after 11 p.m. when a resident at 4310 Prospect Lake Road reported the bush behind his property was on fire.

"A bush fire in this weather?" the dispatcher replied with astonishment.

Sure enough when firemen arrived shortly after 11 p.m. they found flames soaring out of a large pile of logs and old stumps.

It took firemen nearly three hours to extinguish them.

A fire department spokesman said the fire was believed to have been started by a spark from a chainsaw. A person was cutting wood in the area earlier in the evening.

Firemen had just settled back to a normal routine when at 6 a.m. they got a call from an elderly woman at 4393 Cedar Hill Road.

"The bush behind my place is on fire," she reported.

The dispatcher could hardly believe his ears. The rain was coming down in sheets.

"Are you sure?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," the woman said.

Firemen discovered the fire was not in the bush but in a older model car that had been abandoned in a ditch earlier in the evening. The car was gutted.

Vaccine traced for 'mono'

NEW YORK (AP) — An important step towards making a vaccine to fight infectious mononucleosis — the so-called "kissing disease" — has been reported by a Harvard Medical School researcher.

Scientists are anxious for such a vaccine because the virus which causes mononucleosis may also be the cause of two types of cancer.

Dr. David Thorley-Lawson of the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute said Thursday he has purified a vaccine-like substance that makes rabbits produce antibodies against the virus that causes the disease, a lingering illness of teenagers and young adults.

Thorley-Lawson, a biochemist, said the rabbit antibodies neutralize the virus when it is grown in human cells in a test tube.

If further tests succeed, the substance would become a strong candidate for a human vaccine for the widespread ailment.

Mononucleosis is caused by a germ called the Epstein-Barr virus, named for the two British scientists who isolated it in 1964.

Besides causing mononucleosis, it is also believed to help cause two kinds of cancer which are widespread in underdeveloped countries.

One of these is Burkitt's lymphoma, the most common childhood cancer in central Africa. The other is nasopharyngeal carcinoma, a nose cancer common in southern China that kills 50 per cent of its victims within five years.

Scientists believe almost every member of the human race — including those in developed countries — becomes infected with Epstein-Barr virus at some time in life.

Children who get it usually don't show any symptoms. But teen-agers and young adults get a fever, sore throat and general malaise that hangs on for weeks.

Once a person gets Epstein-Barr virus, he carries small but measurable amounts of it in his body for the rest of his life. But he is protected against further flareups by his own immune system.

The hope is that a vaccine would stimulate the immune system to make antibodies in advance of infection.

In an article in the British scientific journal Nature, Thorley-Lawson said he purified the potential vaccine from Burkitt's lymphoma cells. It contains no virus, meaning there would be no threat of accidental infection, as with some anti-viral vaccines.

Hillside Strangler murders admitted

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (AP) — With tears staining his face, Kenneth Bianchi pleaded guilty Friday to strangling two Western Washington University coeds and said he will plead guilty to five of the 13 Hillside Strangler slayings in the Los Angeles area.

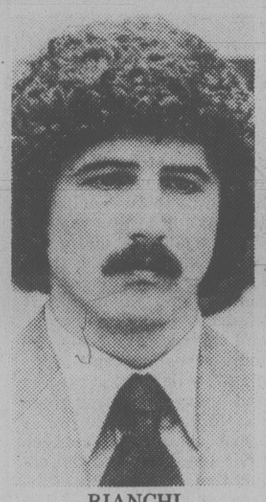

Judge Jack Kurtz of Whatcom County Superior Court immediately sentenced the Bianchi, 28, to two consecutive life terms in prison. Arrangements were made to transport Bianchi to Los Angeles as quickly as possible, said Whatcom County Prosecutor Dave McEachran.

Crying through much of the 65-minute hearing, Bianchi said, "I can't find the words to express the sorrow for what I've done. In no way can I take away the pain I have given to others and in no way can I expect forgiveness from anybody."

A half-hour after Bianchi entered his pleas to two counts of first-degree murder, his cousin, Angelo Buono, 44, of Glendale, Calif., was arrested in connection with 10 of the Hillside Strangler slayings.

Buono was served with a warrant charging him with multiple felony counts, the Los Angeles sheriff's department said. Buono, long mentioned by police as a suspect, claims he is innocent.

Bianchi signed a written agreement that he would plead guilty to all counts against him in California and co-operate with authorities to provide information on the Hillside Strangler slayings.

BIANCHI
... killer of seven

He admitted strangling Karen Mandic, 22, of Bellevue, Wash., and Diane Wilder, 27, of Bremerton, Wash., in Bellingham last January. Their bodies were found piled in the back of a car on a quiet residential street.

Sobbing intermittently, Bianchi told a tense, crowded courtroom:

"I have to take responsibility for what I've done and I have to do everything I can to get Angelo Buono and to devote my life to do everything I possibly can so that nobody else hopefully follows in my footsteps."

Bianchi changed his plea from innocent to guilty after authorities agreed not to seek the death penalty against him, said McEachran.

His plea change startled many. It came at what was to be a routine hearing on whether he was competent to stand trial.

The change came nine months and seven days after Bianchi was arrested in Bellingham. Police speculated that he lured the women into a house, then strangled them.

Security was extremely tight around the courthouse as about 140 spectators squeezed into the courtroom. About 20 more were turned away.

Police chief Terry Mangan said authorities believed Bianchi may have been in some danger, but would not elaborate.

Bianchi, who moved from California to Washington in May, 1978, had pleaded innocent by reason of insanity to the two slayings. Three psychologists tentatively diagnosed him as having a multiple personality when they examined him in March.

Angel dust antidote near

NEW YORK (AP) — A new discovery about PCP, or "angel dust," may spur the search for an antidote to the potent and dangerously unpredictable drug which is widely abused, scientists say.

Researchers said that they have identified specific "receptor sites" in rats' brains to which the PCP molecule binds.

The work was done by Dr. Stephen Zukin of Mt. Sinai School of Medicine, and his wife, Dr. Suzanne Zukin, a biochemist at Albert Einstein College of Medicine.

Zukin said the discovery simplifies the search for a drug to counteract the hallucinations, paranoia and schizophrenic behavior that some people suffer after taking PCP, also known as phencyclidine.

PCP is an animal tranquilizer that is sometimes abused as a recreational drug. The U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse estimated last year that six per cent of young people between the ages of 12 and 17 years — and 14 per cent of those from 18 to 25 — had tried it.

"For a long time, there's been no way to treat the mental effects of PCP," Zukin said.

The Zukins' discovery, reported in this month's Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, not only sheds light on how PCP works but provides a simple test for finding which drugs act on the same sites in the brain — a prerequisite for an antidote.

Scientists think that most psychoactive chemicals — including opiates, tranquilizers, and the brain's own chemical signals — work by activating specific "receptors" in the brain. These receptors are commonly likened to chemical keyholes that can accept only the specific other chemicals that "fit" with their chemical make-up.

The discovery of PCP receptors makes it possible to screen large numbers of drugs for a similar inhibiting effect on PCP, Zukin said.

The discovery also raises the possibility there is an unknown natural chemical similar to PCP that is involved in mental illness, he said.

Auction records clash

NEW YORK (Reuter) — Two longtime auction rivals were at odds Friday, as Sotheby Parke Bernet retracted claims made Thursday that it had set a world's auction record, and conceded that Christie's still holds the record in question.

A Sotheby spokesman said Friday of the $8.61 million earned during a two-day jewelry auction which ended Thursday: "It isn't a record for the world — just for North America."

She explained that "it was a problem in conversions of the figures involved" and acknowledged that Christie's still held the world record.

Nuclear 'goofs' happened

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (UPI) — Doctors say a U.S. nuclear bomb test in 1954 rained radioactive ash on unsuspecting Japanese tuna fishermen and Marshall Islanders in the most widespread nuclear accident in history.

The 23 fishermen had strayed into forbidden waters, ignoring markers that indicated a nuclear test was to occur. Their boat drifted to within 118 miles of the thermonuclear explosion's epicenter. Then unexpected winds took the radioactive cloud over the Marshall Islands.

Dr. Toshiyuki Kumatori, a Japanese scientist, presented a paper on the fishermen Thursday to about 250 physicians from across the world who specialize in radiation accident preparedness. The doctors were in Oak Ridge for a three-day seminar sponsored by Oak Ridge Associated Universities, a contractor for the Department of Energy.

"The 23 (fishermen) were exposed to fallout due to a shift of wind," Kumatori said. The white ash bombarded the men in such quantities that they were forced to shield their eyes and mouths.

One man died from the fallout. A second died 260 days later. Some of the 23 have thyroid and adrenal gland problems and liver ailments to this day.

The same radioactive cloud was pushed by the wind over the Marshall Islands in the South Pacific, and 239 natives were exposed to radioactivity for 55 hours before being rescued by the U.S. government, which has provided medical care to all the victims since.

"It was obviously a mistake; somebody goofed," said Dr. Clarence Lushbaugh, chairman of ORAU's medical and health sciences division. "It was typical of most nuclear accidents. With good safety practices, there shouldn't have been anything like that happen."

"Doctors need practice," Lushbaugh said. "The big problem in this science is that accidents don't occur very often. There have been 92 over a period of 34 years."

"In the whole wide world, only about 14 persons have ever died in a radiation accident," he said. "The ones at Nagasaki and Hiroshima died on purpose."

Lushbaugh said the doctors, many of whom are retained by companies that make and license nuclear reactors, study every minute detail of the recorded accidents.

In 1963 a young Chinese child stole a radioactive source that was being used by agricultural scientists from the fields and took it into his family's home. Two persons received massive doses of radiation and were dead within 16 da[illegible].

A similar case occurred in Mexico City, where a 9-year-old boy pilfered a pencil-like radioactive source from a scientist who left it near his home.

Britain's inflation at 16.5%

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's annual inflation rate soared to 16.5 per cent last month, its highest level in two years, according to official figures published today.

The one per cent rise in the retail price index restored it to the level of August, 1977.

The index rose by 0.8 per cent in each of the previous two months, the employment department said.

Isolated incident told of quake

By WALTER SULLIVAN
New York Times

NEW YORK — Scientists know that larger than normal quantities of radon, a radioactive gas, are released prior to some earthquakes.

Some weeks ago, they began noticing unusual radon releases in two deep wells in the Los Angeles area. Based on these hints, they began an intensive review of data from instruments throughout Southern California to see whether an earthquake could be expected. No other warning signals were found and so no significant earthquake was predicted.

Nevertheless, on Monday a severe earthquake struck Southern California.

For those seeking ways to predict quakes, like Anne Blanchard at the California Institute of Technology, the fact that so little other predictive information about Monday's earthquake was found was "discouraging."

Radon, a short-lived gas, is produced by the radioactive decay of radium within the earth's crustal rocks. Apparently, before some quakes, stress within the rocks open up cracks that allow unusually large amounts of radon to seep into deep wells.

Miss Blanchard, a research assistant at the California Institute of Technology's Seismological Laboratory in Pasadena, said Tuesday that the abnormal levels of radon had been observed in two of four wells being monitored in the Pasadena-Los Angeles area — but nowhere else.

The area as far south as the Imperial Valley has been heavily instrumented to record such warning signs as foreshocks and the changing tilt of the landscape. A "quick look" after the Los Angeles radon observations had shown no unusual activity, Miss Blanchard said. The possibility remains, however, that some form of prior change will be found through more detailed study.

The fault extends north to the southern tip of the Salton Sea. The offset was measured close to California's border with Mexico, where the All-American Canal crosses the fault.

The quake seems to have originated south of the border and then moved north along the fault into California. It is regarded by earth scientists as a "rerun" of one that occurred at almost the same spot in 1940.

Its movement was typical of quakes along the northwest-southeast faults of California, where the far side of the quake always slips to the right relative to the near side. Such earthquakes are produced by the motions of two great rigid sections, or plates, of the earth's surface.

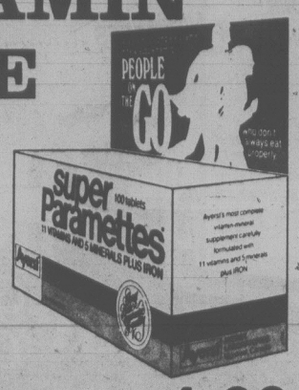

One plate forms the floor of the Pacific Ocean between North America and Asia. The other constitutes almost all of North America plus the western Atlantic.

Several deformations of the California landscape along the San Andreas fault have been under observation in recent years. But in interviews yesterday with a number of specialists engaged in monitoring these changes, none saw them as immediately related to the quake.

Four facts about diamonds

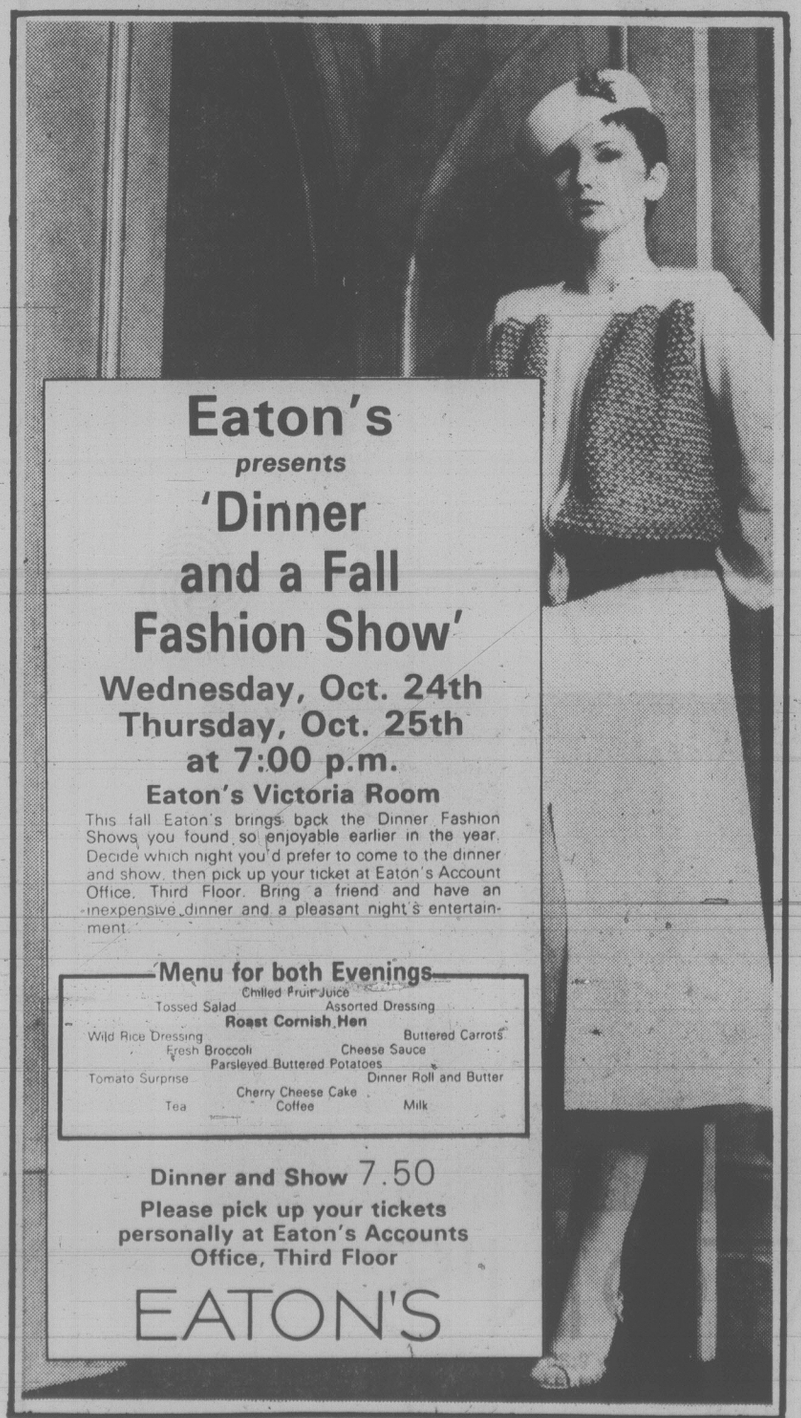

When you are buying a diamond you want the best. We at Eaton's are here to help you find it. In choosing a valuable diamond, there are four main facts to remember.

Fact One is diamond weight. The weight is measured in carats. There are 100 points to a carat.
Fact Two is diamond cut. The more brilliant a diamond is, the more precise the cut.
Fact Three is diamond color. The closer it is to being colorless, the more valuable it is.
Fact Four is diamond clarity. A diamond with very minimal natural imperfections is more precious.

The four diamond facts . . . Eaton's way of helping you choose the best diamond.

Police hunt $154B lien filer

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — Police are searching for a man who has tied up the property of Coloradans ranging from a bank secretary to Denver's mayor, police chief and district attorney by filing liens against the property demanding at least $154.5 billion.

The man who filed the liens, Kenneth Winchell, has vanished. Officials say he might face charges ranging from second-degree perjury to criminal mischief.

Some of the liens were filed against banks who say Winchell owes them money. The liens protest income taxes and water laws and accuse one of four banks named of violating Winchell's constitutional rights.

Winchell is described by former associates as "a land owner and general entrepreneur."

A bench warrant has been issued for his arrest by Denver County Judge George Manerbino. Denver and Breckenridge police and sheriff's deputies in Summit and Eagle counties have also taken up the search.

"It's certainly a new twist," said one lien target, who asked not to be identified. "You don't often hear of somebody who owes money filing liens. It's usually the other way around."

Winchell has left behind almost 100 liens which claim damages ranging from $2 million to $950 million and put scores of pieces of personal and corporate real estate in legal limbo.

A lien is a legal document claiming some interest in a piece of property, usually a debt. It may be filed without showing cause and, even if it is without basis in fact, it stops any sale, transfer or re-mortgage of the property until it is lifted.

Although liens only cost $2 a page to file, fighting them can run into hundreds of dollars in legal and title company fees.

All of the banks named — Colorado National Bank, Metro Bank of Denver, Columbia Savings and Loan and the Bank of Breckenridge — have done business in the past with Winchell. At least two are suing him for alleged non-payment of funds totalling more than $25,000.

Other liens name bank directors and officers.

Dale Boyd, president of the Bank of Breckenridge, said Friday the lien he received accuses his bank of being "petty-fogging shysters operating outside the law and violating man's god-given rights," and of "outrageous conduct, misfeasance, malfeasance and nonfeasance."

A lien also was filed against Boyd's secretary, Alice Lovell.

Liens against Mayor Bill McNichols, District Attorney Dale Tooley and Police Chief Art Dill may be connected with a water-law suit, said assistant district attorney Steve Marsters.

The chief district judge in Denver, Joseph Lilly, has issued an order barring Winchell from filing more liens.

14 years for orgy

BULAWAYO (AP) — A Bulawayo newspaper says a white army commander has been sentenced to 14 years imprisonment for his role in a New Year's Eve orgy of rape and bloodshed at a black tribal village in Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

The Chronicle says David Price, 24, was sentenced Thursday after a court convicted him of 19 charges of rape, one of public violence and one of cattle rustling.

Price pleaded guilty to the charge of public violence, but denied the other allegations, The Chronicle says.

The newspaper says Price commanded a unit of 11 black soldiers during the incident at a government-protected village in southern Zimbabwe Rhodesia. It says the 11 black soldiers drew prison terms of up to 10½ years at trials earlier this year.

During the earlier trials witnesses said Price incited his men to rape four village women a total of 19 times.

Hands off oil: Alberta

Feds get blunt warning

EDMONTON (CP) — Provincial Treasurer Lou Hyndman said Friday night any one who suggests that the federal government should take over Alberta's oil revenue is aiding the cause of Quebec separatism.

In a blunt assertion of provincial rights, he said Alberta has nothing to apologize for its $5 billion Heritage Savings Trust Fund, built up with 30 per cent of the resource revenue.

Hyndman said Alberta is saving part of its resource revenue "for the rainy day" when the oil wells run dry, and any move to take it away will be "totally unacceptable" to Alberta.

"Those who advocate that the federal government confiscate Alberta's resources are clearly playing into the hands of the separatists," he told a University of Alberta conference on the heritage fund.

Hyndman said if Prime Minister Clark succumbed to Ontario's pressure to redistribute Alberta's oil revenue and the heritage fund, the Rene Levesque government would have a good case for leaving Confederation.

The provincial treasurer said contrary to Ontario's claim, the heritage fund is playing a role in Canadian unity. He said the $200 million heritage fund loan to Hydro Quebec, plus earlier loans to Nova Scotia Power Corp. and the governments of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba, demonstrated Alberta's faith in Canada's future.

When a Guelph, Ont., professor suggested that Alberta is being greedy, Hyndman responded with savage scorn.

"The last charge that can be made against Albertans is being greedy. Never in the history of the western world has one province given so much to a federation."

He said Alberta has given the rest of Canada $15 billion by selling oil at "fire-sale prices." Ontario, he added, has been the chief beneficiary by using cheap Alberta oil to feed its industrial machinery.

But Alberta wants to change that, and the heritage fund is a symbol that "the status quo for Central Canada is ended."

"The decision making . . . is moving to the West. We are assisting that. That is one of our goals."

Meanwhile, Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller said Friday the federal government's proposed energy package could cost his province 20,000 jobs and consumers $1.2 billion next year.

Miller said that's the price Ontario will pay if Ottawa moves ahead with its proposed $4-a-barrel increase in the price of oil.

Speaking in Ottawa, Miller said the loss of consumer power over energy pricing would hit every province.

Ontario officials have calculated that each $1-a-barrel increase in the price of oil adds $300 million in extra costs to the Ontario economy.

Ex-city alderman, two others charged in $1M Donut fraud

A former Victoria alderman and two other city businessmen were charged in provincial court Friday with 130 counts involving nearly $1 million in connection with the financially-rocky Donut King restaurant franchise.

Charged with conspiracy to defraud, fraud, secret commission, theft, and forgery were 44-year-old Robert St. George Ellis, 3773 Waring, 34-year-old Terry Richard Strong, 343 Simcoe, and George Sheldon Parkhurst, 2777 Benson.

Three separate informations were laid, two Thursday and the last one Friday, two against Strong and Parkhurst and the other against Ellis and Parkhurst.

Crown counsel Michael Hutchison said the first information dealt with financial matters concerning the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the second with fraud and related offences respecting the Donut King franchise operation, and the third concerning mortgage investment activities.

Ellis was elected to Victoria council in 1974 but was defeated in a bid for a second term.

He was the president of a holding company owning four credit bureaus in B.C. and was an elected officer of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce.

In December, 1974, Ellis reported his holdings as:

Ellis Development Ltd., held jointly with his wife, Diana; an office building in Williams Lake; a single-dwelling house at 2590 Esplanade; property at 685 Beach, 1373 Rockland, on Piers Island; and a suite at 1400 Newport.

He listed as his creditors: the Royal Bank, Montreal Trust, F. Cabeldu and A. Semenchuk.

Ellis was also listed as holder of three dormant companies with no assets; Nor Pac Credit Data Ltd., Credit Bureau of Powell River, and Fan Tan Alley Development Co. Ltd.

Strong is described as a former bank manager.

Parkhurt's companies are listed as: Trizak Development, Olde Kingston Car Co. Ltd., 471 Trans Canada Holdings Ltd., Ronvan Equipment Ltd., Donut King Franchise Service Ltd., Ten Mile Developments Corp., and Rosspark Holdings Corp.

The Donut King company was incorporated Dec. 2, 1977, and Parkhurst was listed as president with Demetrios Psyllakis as a director.

On the five-count first information, Strong and Parkhurst are jointly charged with conspiracy to defraud

Bill cuts paperwork but zeroes on unions

OTTAWA (CP) — The government tabled legislation Friday which would free 70,000 small businesses of their obligation to report financial information to Statistics Canada, but would require more information from labor unions.

Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevens, who introduced the bill in the Commons, told MPs it would speed up the flow of information from the business sector to MPs and government planning bodies, while eliminating much of the duplication which now plagues small businessmen.

The definition of a labor union would also be changed so that all labor unions in the country with membership of at least 100 will be obliged to report to the government. Stevens said this would enable the government to get more complete information on unions.

International unions would have to report all direct receipts from their Canadian affiliates and all expenditures directly attributable to their Canadian operations.

Unions would also be required to provide separate information about special funds, such as strike funds and pension funds.

The bill, which must still be examined by a committee of MPs and debated by the full House, is designed to amend the 17-year-old Corporations and Labor Returns Act, the legislation authorizing the government to collect financial and other information from corporations and labor unions operating in Canada.

The bill would also raise the cut-off point for firms which must report to the government to include only those with $5 million in assets or $10 million in annual sales. The previous limits were $250,000 and $500,000 respectively.

Car chased, rammed twice

Saanich police arrested a 21-year-old man early this morning after a young couple said their vehicle had been rammed twice by another car.

Ronald Wayne White, 18, of 775 Station, and Leanne Vera Whyte, 16, of 2844 Millstream, told police they were driving west along the Trans-Canada Highway at about 2:30 a.m. when a car started to "play games" with them.

They tried to get away and turned on to Wilkinson but the car followed and in the 3900-block rammed the rear of their vehicle.

Police said White turned into a driveway and the car rammed them again.

White got the licence number and about an hour later police arrested a suspect at his home after a short struggle.

The man was released on an undertaking to appear in provincial court next week charged with dangerous driving, leaving the scene of an accident and assault with intent to resist arrest.

Island Socred admits fake letters

A Social Credit party constituency executive admitted Friday he wrote letters to newspaper editors signed with a phoney name and bearing the address of a vacant lot.

Norman Hobson of Lantzville, vice-president of the Nanaimo constituency association, said he did it to protect himself and his property from threats and to save his sister from any embarrassment.

Hobson admitted writing the letters, critical of NDP members and policy, after it was revealed the address on five letters to the editor in the Daily Colonist — two from L.J. Edwards, two from N. Edwards and one from M. Edwards — is a little-used parking lot.

The empty lot at 415 Dunsmuir in Nanaimo has been used for parking for at least 15 months and the property is now owned by the Nanaimo Credit Union.

The last known occupant was Iris Elizabeth Edwards, who moved to a trailer court after the house was demolished. She denied any knowledge of the letters bearing her surname but not her initials.

"I have never written a letter to the Colonist," she said. "But if I did I would have the intestinal fortitude to sign my correct name."

However, Hobson, the woman's brother, said he used the Edwards name with permission and that there was no forgery involved.

He said that ever since he has been in politics — Hobson is also a director of the Nanaimo Regional Board for Lantzville — he has been the object of scare tactics and persons have threatened to burn down his home.

He said that just as an author uses a nom-de-plume he used a family name with permission and an old family address to save his sister from any embarrassment.

"You can use any name you like as long as you don't use it for an illegal purpose," Hobson said. "There has not been any forgery."

David Stupich, NDP MLA for Nanaimo, said he and his campaign workers were aware of the phoney Edwards letter at the time of publication.

"We complained to the local editor and pointed out that the address housed a parking lot," he said. "But we didn't bother too much about them because we had more important things on our mind."

The letter disclosures and Hobson's confirmation that he wrote them opened another chapter in the expanding dirty tricks scandal which has embarrassed the Social Credit government.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has already instructed police to investigate two other forged letters — one to the Colonist and the other to the Vancouver Sun.

Both letters bore the name and addresses of real persons, but those persons later denied they had written the letters. One attacked NDP policy, while the other attacked Kathleen Ruff, former provincial human rights director.

In Sidney, the weekly Review said Friday it also was caught in the same trap as
